South Africa Pledges Help To U.S. Plan for Rhodesia

Foreign Minister Says Failure Would Provide Soviet and Cuba With New Opportunities for Intervention

By JOHN F. BURNS
Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 13—South Africa pledged full support today for the United States effort to promote a negotiated settlement in Rhodesia, warning that failure would create fresh opportunities for the Soviet Union and Cuba to intervene in southern Africa.

"It will be disastrous for Africa and for the free world if a situation were to be allowed to develop which will give the Russians justification to step in under the pretense that they are acting as the protectors of black Africa," the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Hilgard Muller, said in an address before a congress of the governing National Party in Durban.

Excerpts from Muller speech are printed on page 8.

In the fullest statement that South Africa has made on its attitude towards the Rhodesian crisis, Dr. Muller gave no details of the steps that Pretoria might take to encourage a settlement. However, he promised a positive response to the bid of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger for South African support.

"The South African Government welcomes this initiative," he said, referring to Mr. Kissinger's efforts to engage Britain, South Africa and black African states in the search for a solution. "We are prepared to comply with the request to demonstrate our commitment to Africa by giving our full support for a peaceful outcome."

'Prepared to Comply'

Dr. Muller noted that American officials had acknowledged the key role that South Africa could play in the crisis as Rhodesia's sole source of supplies, but there was nothing in the speech to indicate how much leverage South Africa was prepared to apply beyond diplomatic suasion.

The speech, as much political as diplomatic, appeared designed to ease concern among conservatives here who are suspicious of any South African move that might undermine

ORDER BY SYRIANS VIRTUALLY SHUTS LEBANON BORDER

Reports Hint Damascus Is Sending More Troops to War-Torn Country

Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Aug. 13—Syria virtually closed its border with Lebanon today amid speculation that Damascus was sending reinforcements to back up the 20,000 Syrian troops already in this country.

It was the first time Syria had so restricted border travel since the civil war began in Lebanon 16 months ago. Arab diplomats here said the move could be in anticipation of more trouble in Lebanon following the capture of the Palestinian camp of Tell Zaatar by rightist Christians yesterday.

[In Damascus, the Syrian Interior Ministry said that "in view of current security circumstances in Lebanon, and to safeguard the convenience of Lebanese and Syrian citizens," the Government had issued instructions regulating travel and movement between the two countries. Under the regulations, travelers are requested to obtain special advance permits.]

Settlement Hope Gone

The fall of Tell Zaatar virtually ended all talk among leftists and Palestinians of a possible negotiated settlement. Several leftist and pro-Palestinian newspapers today viewed the events at the camp as the final blow to the "Damascus agreement," which was signed by Syria and the Palestine Liberation Organization July 29.

At that time Syria still hoped that the Palestinians would have an opportunity to pull back from the Lebanese conflict.

Evacuees from Tell Zaatar told today of atrocities, such as the outright execution of young men by rightist forces. The rightists, meanwhile, reported the arrival of a large body of armed Iraqis in a Moslem-controlled area of southern Lebanon.

Palestinians Meet

Palestinian leaders under Yasir Arafat met today to consider their next move.

"Syria and not their Lebanese rightist lackeys is our main adversary," a Palestinian source commented.

At the same time, Kamal Jumblat, the head of the Lebanese leftist-Moslem alliance, announced plans for an all-out war against the rightists and the Syrians.

A prominent right-wing Christian leader, Pierre Gemayel, head of the Phalange Party, ignored both the leftists and the Palestinians and appealed to Moslem leaders to open talks with the Christians

FORD AIDES OFFER DELEGATE TOTALS SHOWING VICTORY

But State-by-State Count Is Immediately Challenged by Reagan Strategist

1,135 VOTES CLAIMED

Analysis Indicates Inclusion of Private Assurances in First-Ballot Figures

By R. W. APPLE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 13 — President Ford's managers issued today a state-by-state delegate count showing Mr. Ford with enough votes for a first-ballot victory at the Republican National Convention, but it was immediately challenged by Ronald Reagan's principal strategist.

According to The New York Times's tabulation, Mr. Ford was still 12 votes short of the 1,130 needed for nomination. He gained three delegates today, and his rival picked up two.

With the beginning of the convention less than 72 hours away, James A. Baker 3d, Mr. Ford's chief delegate hunter, claimed 1,135 votes for the President, gave Mr. Reagan 1,031 and said that 93 remained uncommitted.

Views of Uncommitted

It appeared from an analysis of the figures that Mr. Baker had included in the Ford total a number of uncommitted delegates from whom he had received private assurances of support in order to put Mr. Ford over the 1,130-vote mark.

Mr. Baker claimed more delegates in six states than are credited to the President by The Times, notably in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. Although he insisted that he was counting only those who had made public commitments or were bound by law, several delegates included in his Ford totals said in telephone interviews that they remained uncommitted.

Figures Disputed

John P. Sears, the chief Reagan strategist, disputed Mr. Baker's figures in 19 of the 54 delegations, but he gave no specific state-by-state breakdown of his own. He mentioned New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware and North Dakota, among others, as states in which Mr. Reagan would get more votes Wednesday night than Mr. Baker predicted.

Continuing his practice of the last several weeks, Mr. Sears insisted that when the roll was called, Mr. Reagan would have 1,140 votes.

The convention's Platform Committee, meantime, moved toward approval of a docu-

MARS LIFE THEORY RECEIVES SETBACK

Molecules in Sample of Soil Yield No Carbon—Experts Call a Test Inconclusive

By VICTOR K. McELHENY

Scientific optimism about finding life on Mars diminished somewhat yesterday with the announcement that a Martian soil sample contained no detectable level of complex carbon-containing molecules that might be produced by microbes.

Scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., hastened to point out that the readings from the instruments did not rule out the presence of micro-organisms.

The negative finding immediately produced controversy at a news conference. The negative finding was made by an organic analysis instrument, which Dr. Klaus Biemann, the scientist in charge of it, said was not designed as a "life detection" instrument. He also noted that the instrument's detection sensitivity was one part in a million.

The instrument's findings have been regarded as an important check on results from a group of biology experiments

Minister in Cabinet Bids South Africans Reform Race Policy

Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 13—South Africa's Foreign Minister acknowledged today that his country would have to adjust its racial policies if it was ever to have normal international relationships again.

The minister, Dr. Hilgard Muller, thus joined a number of Cabinet ministers who have conceded that reforms will have to be made in the light of the anti-Government rioting in black townships that has taken at least 218 lives. Dr. Muller addressed a meeting of the ruling National Party in Durban.

As Dr. Muller spoke, usually reliable sources reported that the special security police had arrested 50 black leaders, including Winnie Mandela, the wife of Nelson Mandela, an imprisoned black resistance leader of the 1960's. The informants said that Mrs. Mandela was taken into custody in Soweto, the black township near Johannesburg where the upheavals began in June.

Maj. Gen. Michael C. Geldenhuys, chief of the security police, confirmed tonight that a number of people had been arrested, but declined to say whether Mrs. Mandela had been among them. However, The

OCEAN OIL LEASES OFF L.I. ENJOINED

Sale Is Barred by Court—Faulty Impact Statement by U.S. Agency Cited

By CHARLES KAISER

The Federal Government was enjoined yesterday from carrying out the first sale of oil and natural-gas leases in the Atlantic Ocean, which had been scheduled for next Tuesday.

Acting in a case brought by New York State, Nassau and Suffolk Counties, an environmentalist group and five Long Island municipalities, Judge Jack B. Weinstein of United States District Court in Brooklyn granted a preliminary injunction to block the sale, which is expected to bring the Federal Government $400 million to $600 million.

Lawyers for the Department of Interior and a trade group representing interested oil companies said they would seek a stay of the injunction on Monday in the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit. An Interior Department spokesman said there was still a slim chance that the sale would proceed on Tuesday as scheduled if the appeal is successful.

Platform Panel Supports Ford Foreign Policy View

BY RICHARD L. MADDEN
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 13—The Republican Platform Committee approved tonight a party document generally supporting President Ford's foreign policies and containing conservative planks aimed at pleasing his rival, Ronald Reagan.

In its last major fight before ending five days of debate and skirmishing over a platform generally advocating less government by Washington, the committee rejected, by a vote of 55 to 43, a plank by Reagan delegates calling for the United States to retain "sovereign rights" over the Panama Canal.

Several Reagan delegates, who have been battling to inject more conservative views into the platform, said they planned to try to take the fight over the Panama Canal problem and perhaps other issues to the convention floor next week.

In addition, other delegates said they would try to get the convention to take no position on whether to endorse the equal rights amendment, which was endorsed last night by a 4-vote margin of the Platform Committee.

It was unclear, however, how many floor fights might develop over the platform before the convention is to consider

HAYS WITHDRAWS FROM HOUSE RACE

Cites 'Harassment' as Result of Link to Elizabeth Ray Along With Ill Health

By RICHARD D. LYONS
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13—Representative Wayne L. Hays, with his Congressional power shattered by scandal, withdrew today as a Democratic candidate for the House seat from Ohio that he has held for 28 years.

Mr. Hays issued a statement through his office here citing ill health as the major factor in his retirement, "coupled with the harassment my family and I have taken from The Washington Post."

Charges in Paper

The reference was to the charges by Elizabeth Ray, first published by The Post three months ago, that Mr. Hays had given her a job as a House secretary at a salary of $14,000 a year although she had merely served as his mistress. Miss Ray has been testifying before a Federal grand jury this week about her charges.

While conceding a liaison with Miss Ray, Mr. Hays denied that she had performed no meaningful work during the almost two years she had been employed on Capitol Hill by Mr. Hayes and by former Representative Kenneth J. Gray of Illinois.

Mr. Hays also charged that Miss Ray had extorted more

215 More Daily Subway Runs Will Be Eliminated by Aug. 30

By EDWARD C. BURKS

The Transit Authority will eliminate 215 additional daily train runs in the subway system as of Aug. 30, making a total of 855 runs dropped since early in 1975.

Although the newest service cutbacks are described by the authority as amounting to just 3 percent, there has been a sharp decline in daily trains in recent years — from 8,200 in 1967 to 7,192 in March 1975 to 6,337 as of Aug. 30.

Also, as of Aug. 30, the waiting time between rush hour trains on the A, B, D, N and RR lines will be increased from 4 to 5 minutes, a 25 percent increase.

A spokesman for the authority attributed the new cuts—all on the BMT and IND divisions — to declining ridership, and the need for operating economies. The average weekday ridership has declined from 5.5 million shortly after World War II to 4.7 million in 1964 and to 3,488,000 this year.

The Committee for Better Transit Inc., one of the most active rider groups, called for an accelerated state investigation of the management and efficiency of the Metropolitan Transportation Authority, parent agency of the Transit Authority.

In late July, David L. Yunich, M.T.A. chairman, called a news conference to announce that "a superior management job" had brought about savings sufficient to allow a prediction of holding the 50-cent fare through 1977. He said then that the service cuts in 1975 and 1976 had been absorbed by the public "with nary a whimper."

Doctors Find Hint The Legion Illness May Have Spread

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN
Special to The New York Times

HARRISBURG, Pa., Aug. 13—Epidemiologists investigating the mysterious outbreak of the so-called legionnaire's disease, say they have found indications that two persons who attended the International Eucharistic Congress in Philadelphia last week may have contracted the respiratory illness.

The findings were presented today at an Atlanta meeting of Federal epidemiologists, officials from the Pennsylvania and Philadelphia health departments and experts in toxicology, pharmacology and pathology.

The two cases, both involving men hospitalized Wednesday suffering from an illness with symptoms like those of the legionnaire's disease, are the first indication that the malady affected persons not directly connected with the Legion meeting.

Dr. Lewis Polk, the Philadelphia Health Commissioner, said tonight that the two men, whom he did not identify, had experienced a fever in excess

Port Said Is Bustling With Activity Again

By ERIC PACE
Special to The New York Times

PORT SAID, Egypt, Aug. 7—The renewed economic activity at this raffish old Suez Canal port includes some fleshly pursuits.

With the canal back in business and fancy development plans afoot, belly dancers have fluttered back to Port Said like swallows returning to Capistrano.

And fully a half ton of narcotics was sneaked into the canal's northern entrance here last month, the local authorities reported, before it was seized and the smugglers apprehended.

While viewing the drug traffic with alarm, the Egyptian Government points with pride to other commercial undertakings in the city: a 385,000 square-yard area has been designated as a "free zone," where businesses can operate without paying Egyptian customs duties and other taxes and without currency exchange restrictions.

New business of practically any kind is welcome to the worldly residents of Port Said. Most of them were evacuated for several years after the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, when Israeli troops advanced to near here and the canal was closed.

Nocturnal Pleasures

A local official, Ali el-Abassy, told a traveler here today: "It makes us happy to see the ships' lights again."

Other nocturnal pleasures are provided by the city's liberal supplies of Scotch whisky and by its three main nightclubs, where customers toss banknotes at the belly dancers and utter cries of admiration as in years gone by.

Matters have not returned to where they were in Port Said's pre-1967 heyday, however, when even a Government brochure of 1966 vouchsafed that "Port Said flings its doors open to all visitors. Each will find satisfaction, whatever his inclinations may be." It also reported that Port Said's "nightclubs never know sleep—they are ever ready to celebrate the arrival of visitors."

Official utterances are vastly more sober now that the Government has set about the economic reconstruction of the Suez Canal area—which was battered by the wars of 1967 and 1973—and the improvement of the canal, which was finally reopened on June 5, 1975.

'Full of Vivacity'

A flier issued by the Port Said branch of the Egyptian Investment and Freezones Authority merely says the city offers "attractive Mediterranean climatic conditions" and "all necessary services, facilities and infrastructure." And an official of the branch said in an interview today, "Now that the canal is open the city is full of vivacity."

It was because of the building of the 106-mile canal, which links the Mediterranean with the Gulf of Suez, that Port Said was founded, in 1859.

Over the years sailors, British troops, businessmen and travelers of many nationalities gave a cosmopolitan air to the city's esplandes and distinctive wooden arcades.

Even before World War I, a large percentage of Port Said's population was foreign. But in 1956, when President Gamal Abdel Nasser nationalized the Suez Canal's operating company, Egyptian nationalists removed the statue of Ferdinand de Lesseps, the aristocratic Frenchman who had pioneered the canal's construction.

Today the pedestal where the statue once stood was still visible where the waters of the canal and the Mediterranean meet. It was plastered with a handbill advertising the belly dancer at the Beau Rivage nightclub.

Port Said's crossroads location has long made it and its surroundings a magnet for smugglers, local residents assert, although smuggling activities were interrupted by the wars.

Port Said's population of roughly 300,000 declined to fewere than 40,000 after the 1967 war but has now surpassed the prewar figure, officials say.

Many evacuated residents of Port Said returned because their lives had been better here than elsewhere in crowded Egypt, whose population is approaching 40 million.

Other Egyptians have flocked here to profit from the reopening of the canal, where vessels are expected to pay tolls of about $400 million or more this year.

In addition, jobs are being provided by improvements to the canal: Egypt, with financial aid from Japan, has begun a project to widen and deepen the waterway.

As a pharmacist named Fuad Alamedin observed to a traveler: "Port Said is good; later there will be more money."

Egypt Said to Reinforce Its Frontier With Libya

Special to The New York Times

CAIRO, Aug. 13—A Cairo newspaper said today that Egypt had moved troops, tanks and antiaircraft weapons westward to reinforce its border with Libya. President Anwar el-Sadat charged, meanwhile, that Libya was training mercenaries to invade four African countries.

The President, in an interview with a Kuwaiti newspaper released by the Egyptian Middle East News Agency, said that Libya was training mercenaries in three camps to "invade the Sudan, Chad and Tunisia."

"There is also a fourth camp set up for Egypt," he said, "and we have the names of all those working in it."

Mr. Sadat also charged that the hijacking last month of an Air France airliner to Entebbe Airport in Uganda, with many Israelis on board, had been arranged by President Mpammar el-Qaddafi of Libya and George Habash, chief of the radical Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

"Qaddafi's file is in our hands," President Sadat said. "We will inform Arab Governments of what Qaddafi is planning for them. I will not let Qaddafi get away with this and his bombs will not shake us."

Egypt has accused Libya of having hired an Egyptian to plant two bombs that exploded Sunday in a Government office building in central Cairo. The bombs injured 14 persons, including the accused, who was blinded.

Since the explosions, Egypt has tightened security at airports, movie theaters and government buildings. Tension has mounted in the Capital.

On Wednesday a fire broke out at the construction site of a library for the American University in Cairo. An eager policeman arrested an Egyptian teacher at the university who had called in the alarm and an American student, Robert Johnson, who was taking pictures. They were arrested apparently on suspicion of having set the blaze. Both spent the night in jail, then were released.

There were early reports that the fire, which seemed to have broken out in several places, was arson. A government official later said it had been caused by faulty wiring.

President Sadat, in his interview, said he wanted to put other nations on guard "particularly as Soviet weapons are pouring into Libya."

The Cairo newspaper Al Ahram quoted a Government spokesman as having said that troops and weapons had been sent to western Egypt to protect the border and prevent infiltration by saboteurs.

The article said that "experts from a major power" had been planning the operations and providing arms for them. Though Al Ahram did not name the country involved, it apparently meant the Soviet Union.

Al Ahram did not say when the reinforcements had been sent, but Colonel Qaddafi charged last week that Egypt was massing troops on the border.

Egyptian-Libyan relations have been poor since 1973, when President Sadat backed out of a plan to unite Egypt and Libya.

for the reunification of Lebanon. But Mr. Gemayel said a future government must be based on a system of decentralized administration.

This reportedly was the closest any Christian leader had come to admitting in public that a full reintegration of the Lebanese people was no longer possible.

Arab diplomats gave a number of possible reasons for Syrian restriction of travel across the Lebanese border, including the expectation of more trouble in Lebanon and a huge influx into Syria of people seeking to escape the gathering war.

Travelers from Syria in the last few days reported a substantial of Syrian military movement between the border and the Bekaa Valley in eastern Lebanon, where the bulk of Syrian troops in this country are stationed.

Lebanese leftists and the Palestinians have reported that Syria was reinforcing its troops in Sofar, about 13 miles east of here on the Beirut-Damascus highway, and at the Christian town of Jezzine in the southern Chouf district, some 22 miles south of here.

In a speech last month, President Hafez al-Assad of Syria said that nearly a million people had gone to Syria from Lebanon in the last year and a half. He said they were Syrian residents of Lebanon as well as Lebanese and Palestinians.

According to Arab diplomatic sources, Syria's ability to absorb the influx may be at an end now. Bread and gasoline shortages in the Syrian capital were reported by travelers in the past week.

They also spoke of security problems, with at least one explosion heard in Damascus every night this week.

Mr. Jumblat, speaking at a crowded news conference, said the "conclusive battle" in the civil war should be expected in Beirut, in the mountains and in the northern port of Tripoli.

He dismissed as "minor" the military gains made by the rightists, including the capture of Tell Zaatar.

Attack Said to Be Planned

Mr. Jumblat disclosed plans for an offensive to get Syrian troops out of Lebanon and to head off what he called the establishment of a "Christian Maronite state" in parts of the country. He said he spoke in the name of the leftist-Moslem alliance that comprises 11 organizations, each with its own militia.

The plans, he said would entail formation of a 4,000-man "popular army," compulsory military training for young men who have not yet joined the war and seeking $100 million in aid from the Arab states.

A radio station controlled by the right-wing President of Lebanon, Suleiman Franjieh, asserted tonight that 2,100 Iraqis with "light and heavy weapons" had arrived at the Moslem-held port of Saida in southern Lebanon, two ships.

At a news conf rightists produced identified as Iraq that they had con Egypt. They were been caught durin a Beirut suburb.

U.S. Signs Lisbon Accord Giving $25 Million in Aid

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times

LISBON, Aug. 13—The United States signed a series of accords with Portugal here today for an additional $25 million in economic and social aid.

The aid is part of a broad program of economic cooperation between the two countries. But today's signing ceremony took on the significance of a vote of confidence for the new Socialist Government whose program was endorsed by the National Assembly early yesterday.

Strongly attacked by the Communist Party, the Socialist program calls for a reorganizaion of the areas of the economy that have been nationalized and gives guarantees to the private sector. The program stresses national independence but gives priority to relations with Western Europe and traditional relations with the United States.

Ambassador Frank C. Carlucci of the United States, speaking Portuguese, expressed special satisfaction in signing the four accords with Portugal's "first freely elected Government in half a century."

Grateful to U.S.

On the Portuguese side, the new Foreign Minister, José Medeiros Ferreira, expressed appreciation for the solidarity shown by the United States in Portugal's efforts for economic recovery, even "in difficult times."

Nevertheless, it was clear that despite its ties in the North Alantic Treaty Organization, Portugal would pursue its independent foreign policy. It was announced today that Lisbon would send a high-level delegation to attend the nonaligned conference in Sri Lanka as a guest.

There were reports also that a mission was expected from the Soviet Union to negotiate a contract for construction of six ships at the northern city of Viana do Castelo.

The agreements signed with the United States include a $1 million grant for technical training, an $11 million loan for the construction of schools, an $8 million loan for basic sanitation projects in rural villages and $5 million in commodity credit for the purchase of 20,000 tons of rice.

Total projected United States aid to Portugal for fiscal 1976 amounts to $142,500,000. This includes a $35,000 emergency relief and resettlement grant for an estimated 600,000 refugees from Portugal's former African colonies.

East Germans Bar Protest From

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

BONN, Aug. 13—East German border policemen prevented hundreds of West German students from crossing to West Berlin by bus today for a protest against the wall that sealed the division of the city 15 years ago. A number of others were able to get through, however.

The buses had been chartered by a conservative student group, the youth wing of the Christian Democratic Party, for the 110-mile trip. Some participants said their banners and protest signs were rolled up under their seats when they approached the East German border checkpoints, but at least 10 buses and a few private cars were refused permission to use the transit routes.

Several buses were allowed through. The drivers said later they had lied about their passengers.

The four-power 1971 agreement that opened up the transit routes forbids the East Germans from searching travelers or their vehicles "except in special cases where there is sufficient reason to suspect that misuse of the transit routes is intended."

East German guards told those who were turned back that they were suspected of such intent. The West German Government, which must stand for re-election Oct. 3, sent a telegram to East Berlin demanding an explanation for each case and said it would protest.

A businessman who drove from West Berlin to Bonn said that hundreds of East German policemen were parked along the main superhighway from Berlin to Helmstedt but that he had not been subjected to unusual control procedures.

...zyslaw Uminski, ... the Communist ...ganization in the ...

Mr. Uminski related that he had run into powerful opposition from party functionaries in January when he devised a questionnaire to be filled out anonymously by all the plant's workers.

The questionnaire asked for opinions about virtually everything affecting life and work at the Lenin Shipyard. But it also asked searching and politically provocative questions. One asked, for example whether the workers had too little influence on authorities generally.

The overwhelming majority of answers to that question, Mr. Uminski said, was yes.

The questionnaire went on to ask workers what they thought the trade union should be doing for them economically, ideologically, and politically.

Communist trade unions, in common with Communist Parties themselves, are directed from the top, and a question of this kind from a trade union in the Soviet bloc to its workers is ordinarily unheard of.

"I had a real struggle getting that questionnaire organized," Mr. Uminski said, "and you can be sure there were some people who didn't like the answers that were coming in one bit. But we all learned something from it."

Surveys Are Rare

But such innovations as systematic opinion sampling evidently remain rare. One senior party official said she could still judge the climate well enough by her daily conversations with people.

Interviews with workers at a coal-loading port here disclosed that for them, "consultations" on a new wage-price package had consisted solely of two meetings—one an "open" meeting of all 470 men, the other a meeting of party members.

Each meeting lasted several hours, and many men reportedly gave heated speeches. At each, a local party leader was present to "take notes" and report to higher party levels. But there were no votes, no resolutions, and none of the opinions expressed had the slightest binding effect.

Most workers said they were glad discussions were going on, but that they would suspend judgment until the Government acted.

"You can't be sure of things," one worker said. "They tell us every day there's plenty of sugar in Poland, but you just try to buy a kilo of it without standing in line for an hour."

"There's no big worry," a shop foreman said. "They can't do anything big without our say-so anymore. They try and we stop work, it's that simple. So we are getting more democracy."

Old Spanish Foes Test Tentative Harmony

By HENRY GINIGER
Special to The New York Times

MADRID, Aug. 13—Representatives of the two Spains—the victors and the vanquished of the Civil War—are starting to talk with each other again after almost 40 years of struggle and hate.

On Wednesday night Prime Minister Adolfo Suárez, heir to a rightist, authoritarian tradition established by Franco, dined in a private home with Felipe González, secretary general of the Spanish Socialist Workers Party, who a year ago was prosecuted for his anti-Franco opinions and activities. The meeting followed several other direct contacts between Mr. Suárez and opposition leaders.

If the two, who talked of the problem of establishing democracy in Spain, did not entirely agree, they were taking part in the dialogue that Mr. Suárez promised when he came into office unexpectedly a little over a month ago. Greeted at the time with suspicion, he has gone further toward establishing harmony and normal political discourse than anyone since the death of Franco in November.

New Dining Partners

The harmony is still tentative. Mr. Suárez, who has yet to announce the specific steps he contemplates to establish representative government, is bedeviled by major economic problems threating serious unrest in the months ahead. Nonetheless, the atmosphere is a striking contract with that not only of Franco's time but also with the period of Mr. Suárez's immediate predecessor, Carlos Arias Navarro.

Mr. Arias, a convinced Francoist reluctantly effecting a transition to a more liberal monarchy, could never have dined with Mr. González or any other member of the opposition. Others in his Cabinet did have such contracts, but between Mr. Arias, whose speeches were full of tribute to the past, and the array of Spanish forces seeking to wipe it out the gulf was unbridgeable and the climate tense.

When Mr. Suárez moved into the prime minister's office in the Paseo de la Castellana, he symbolized the change by replacing a portrait of Generalissimo Franco that Mr. Arias had kept in the Cabinet room with a picture of the new King, Juan Carlos.

Mr. Suárez has also reversed the situation by three public acts.

One was a statement of Government policy, issued July 17, recognizing popular sovereignty as the source of political power and pledging to work for a representative system open to all Spaniards.

The second was a promise of amnesty for political offenses—a unanimous demand of all opposition forces as a necessary preliminary to reconciliation. On July 30 the amnesty, applicable to all offenses except those involving physical attacks on persons, was decreed by the King. The decree has been carried out in a slow and limited way, but the major opposition organization, Democratic Coordination, has hailed it as "a positive step toward national political détente."

The third move involved easing tensions with the Roman Catholic Church, still an influential institution in Spain. After the King announced that he intended to abandon the centuries-old privilege of vetoing nominations of bishops, an agreement was signed with the Vatican July 28 for a two-year revision of the concordat that regulates the church's status. The establishment of greater independence for the church through a separation of church and state has long been sought by the Vatican and by the Spanish hierarchy.

The New Generation

Prime Minister Suárez and King Juan Carlos who, with Mr. González, represent a post-Civil War generation that makes up 70 percent of the population of over 35 million, have acted in tandem in striking out along new paths instead of struggling with each other, as was the case between the King and Mr. Arias. But the King and his new Prime Minister must still resolve some weighty questions such as:

¶How far to go in meeting opposition demands for a constituent assembly to draw up a new political system and subject the monarchy to popular approval. The opposition is demanding still another government, representing the various political currents, to carry out the election of such an assembly.

¶How far to go to meet demands for regional freedoms, demands that are being heard in virtually every part of Spain.

¶What to do with the Communist Party, which is demanding its place in legal activity after 40 years of clandestine operation and exile.

¶How to replace the now universally rejected syndicates, the state-run organizations of business and labor, and what recognition to give to labor organizations, including those dominated by the Communists.

¶How to control ultraconservative opinion, still strongly entrenched in the armed forces, the administration, the police and Parliament and other institutions held over from the past.

Deteriorating Economy

While wrestling with such problems, the Cabinet has had to pay increasing attention to an economic situation that is threatening to make peaceful change difficult. A combination of one of the highest inflation rates in Europe, an industrial slowdown, severe unemployment and a big deficit in foreign payments has defeated most efforts, and the Government faces the prospect of labor unrest in the fall.

The new Cabinet has been taking piecemeal measures to alleviate unemployment and encourage investment. Monday it got a breathing spell when it signed a five-year $1 billion loan agreement with 8 Spanish banks and 19 foreign ones.

Finance Minister Eduardo Carriles described the loan as proof of international confidence in Spain, but there appear to be too many problems for confidence to be particularly strong.

Kissinger Presses for Ocean Agreement

By PAUL HOFMANN
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Aug. 13—Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger warned today that the United States might unilaterally permit American companies to go ahead with proposed ocean-bed mining ventures unless an international consensus on the issue was reached soon.

He recalled that the United States had acted unilaterally earlier this year by enacting legislation establishing a 200-mile fishing limit off American shores.

"We may act again unilaterally," the Secretary said, "with respect to the deep sea beds."

He made it clear, however, that the United States would prefer to proceed in agreement with other nations.

Mr. Kissinger, who was addressing the staff of the American delegation to the Law of the Sea conference here, said the question of deep-sea mining was the meeting's "most difficult" issue.

His remarks recalled a statement he made in a speech in New York in April. He declared then that the United States was "many years ahead" of any other country in sea-mining technology.

"If the deep seabeds are not subject to international agreement the United States can and will proceed to explore and mine on its own," the Secretary said in April.

Alluding to third-world countries, he noted today that some participants in the conference here tended to deny a role for private enterprise in the exploitation of deep-sea resources. Mr. Kissinger said that such a position was aimed at undoing earlier agreements, adding that "we will never agree to it."

At stake is a wealth of strategic metals — foremostly nickel — contained in small rocks, or nodules, on the ocean floor, two to three miles beneath the surface.

United States corporations have developed technology to retrieve the modules, and are eager to start ocean-floor mining. Bills before Congress would authorize American companies to start such operations.

Plans by the United States and other industrial nations to encourage private mining are opposed by developing countries. Many members of the third-world coalition want to reserve the ocean-floor industry to a proposed international agency with a global "enterprise" as its operative arm.

Earlier this year a compromise seemed to have been worked out whereby exploitation of ocean-bed sites was to be split between the future International Sea-Bed Authority and private Western and Japanese companies.

Since then, the third-world stand has stiffened again. Mr. Kissinger observed today that the United States had accepted what he called a "double-access system" in sea-bed mining, but was determined to defend the right of American companies to have a share in the new industry.

"There are limits," the Secretary said, "beyond which we cannot be pushed."

Mr. Kissinger announced that he would return in two to three weeks for another visit to the maritime conference, at which the United States delegation is headed by T. Vincent Learson. If no solution has been reached by then, he said, he will invite Foreign Ministers of other countries to help try to break the deadlock.

In today's Council meeting, the Turkish minister accused Greece of "chauvinistic megalomania." He said that the Athens Government's claims to the Aegean continental shelf betrayed a design to transform that part of the Mediterranean into a "Greek lake."

He asserted that Greece's request for an urgent Security Council meeting to consider its complaint against the activities of the Turkish research vessel, the Sismik I, was only a "propaganda exercise."

The Greek Foreign Minister, Mr. Bitsios, speaking after Mr. Caglayangil, quoted from statements by Turkish leaders in arguing that Ankara wanted to annex Greek islands in the Aegean.

The Council debate on the Aegean dispute will continue on Tuesday.

No draft resolution has been introduced, and it is unlikely that a text will materialize before the result of the United States mediation attempt is known.

ECUADOR 'INVITES' PRIESTS TO LEAVE

4 U.S. Bishops in Group of 37 Called Subversives

QUITO, Ecuador, Aug. 13 (Reuters)—Ecuador's Government said tonight that it had asked 37 Roman Catholic clergymen, including four American bishops, to leave the country for having taken part in a subversive meeting.

The Americans were identified as the Most Rev. Robert F. Sanchez, archbishop of Santa Fe, N.M.; the Most Rev. Patrick F. Flores, auxiliary to the archbishop of San Antonio, Tex.; the Most Rev. Gilbert E. Chavez, auxiliary bishop of San Diego, Calif., and the Most Rev. Juan A. Arzube, auxiliary to the archbishop of Los Angeles.

The acting Interior Minister, Javier Manrique, said some of the 37 had already left and the others were expected to leave soon. The Government had "invited them to leave" the country, he said, after the police raided their meeting last night in Riobamba, 100 miles south of here.

Mr. Manrique said at a news conference that the 37, all foreigners, were brought here for questioning with 11 European cleregymn early today.

He said the clergymen had been distributing subversive material and planned to interfere in the internal affairs of Ecuador and other countries.

"There is freedom of expression in Ecuador, but we cannot accept foreigners interfering in the affairs of our country," he added.

Mr. Manrique said several of the priests had been expelled from their countries: adding that 13 bishops and archbishops and two nuns were among those attending the meeting.

3 Italian Women In Toxic-Gas Area Undergo Abortions

SEVESO, Italy, Aug. 13 (AP)—Three women in this northeastern Italian community underwent the first therapeutic abortions today in connection with the poisonous cloud of chemicals that spread over this village a month ago, physicians reported.

The women, 21 to 37 years old and in the third month of pregnancy, had the abortions out of fear that their babies might be deformed by the effects of the gas, the doctors said.

They said the operations, performed at a clinic in nearby Milan, were successful and that the fetuses would undergo laboratory tests in Italy and France to determine what effect the gas may have had.

Italian law bars abortion, though courts have ruled that the operation may be performed if the health of the woman or her offspring is endangered.

The Roman Catholic newspaper Avvenire denounced the abortions today as the "murder of innocent victims," but leftist newspapers termed the decision" a victory in the battle for legalized abortion." In Parliament, leftists are backing a bill that would permit abortion on demand.

A cloud of gas carrying poisonous dioxin crystals descend-on Seveso and two nearby villages after an industrial accident at the Icmesa chemical plant July 10. More than 700 residents have since been evacuated from their homes.

Medical sources said that three more pregnant women from Seveso had been admitted to the same clinic and might undergo abortion next week.

Health authorities said that about 200 women in the Seveso area were in the first three months of pregnancy, the most susceptible period, when the accident occurred.

eak in Relations Between Giscard and Chirac Is Predicted as Tension Mounts

The New York Times

ug. 13—Tension is just below the surons between Presi- Giscard d'Estaing e Minister Jacques onvincing political break must come. ons that not only rivate conversa- o are beginning to he press are not Chirac will go, but whether he will quit out.

y news magazine ich tends to favor and his Gaullist than Mr. Giscard pendent Republic- alyzed the Presi- ic choice. It said e either to depend t prime minister, other," and aban- lip service for s, or try to "Gis- country and ransparent prime would be a glori- amp."

d to a King

ne also recounted h illustrations of personal style of s, including his establishing hier- col and deciding etails, such as the ere to be bought y dinner he gave for President Ford in Washington.

It quoted sharp-tongued "Elysée" sources as having said that Mr. Giscard "'takes himself for the King of France,' while sadder spirits regret that he devotes part of his time to the most minute changes in Elysée etiquette instead of to affairs of state.'"

When Mr. Giscard invited Mr. Chirac for a "family weekend" in the south of France, it said, two especially comfortable chairs were reserved on the terrace for the Giscards while the Chiracs were given two more-ordinary seats, and at the table the waiters were instructed to serve Mr. and Mrs. Giscard first.

The Nouvel Observateur, a pro-Socialist weekly, quoted Mr. Chirac as having told friends in his constituency that "the President conducts himself more and more like a monarch."

The magazine stressed Mr. Chirac's verve and ambition, which it said inevitably tended to draw power away from the President despite the Prime Minister's reputed devotion to the Gaullist constitution.

It suggested that Mr. Chirac wouldn't really want to undermine the office of President, since he hoped to fill it one day, but had finally been rebuffed in his drive to influence the policy.

It quoted Mr. Chirac, commenting on a display of martial arts that he saw in Japan, as having said, "To conquer, you have to know when not to win." It reported that his top political adviser was urging him to resign and fight Mr. Giscard from outside.

Political sources here are buzzing with anecdotes and speculation about a struggle for both power and policy between the two top men.

Asked about a rumor that Mr. Chirac had submitted his resignation for the President to accept when he chose, the spokesman at the Hôtel Matignon, the Prime Minister's office, replied: "The President has several trips this month, and so does Chirac, and there will be brief vacations, so nothing is likely to happen before the end of August. They'll barely be seeing each other."

Under the Constitution handcrafted by de Gaulle there is ambiguity about the relative powers of the president, who is directly elected, and the Prime Minister, who is chosen by the president but is responsible to the Parliament.

A Shift in Parliament

President de Gaulle and his Gaullist successor, Georges Pompidou, had submissive Prime Ministers. Mr. Pompidou dismissed Jacques Chaban-Delmas for having tried to fashion policies on his own. But they were Presidents whose own party dominated Parliament.

Mr. Giscard is the first President under the present Constitution who must rely on a parliamentary coalition in which his party is a decidedly junior member.

A basic policy dispute underlies the power and personality strains between Mr. Giscard and Mr. Chirac, and it, too, is exacerbated by the Constitution. Mr. Giscard's term of office runs until 1981 and he can be re-elected for seven more years. But parliamentary elections must be held by the spring of 1978, which means a race by then for Mr. Chirac.

Polls show that the leftist opposition would win if the elections were held now. Mr. Giscard has said that if the Communist-Socialist alliance won, he would remain in office. Should that happen, however, he would have to take his prime minister from the Opposition, which would provoke a political crisis, or refuse, which would provoke a constitutional crisis. In either event Mr. Chirac and all his Gaullist partisans would lose office.

So although they are still almost two years away, the parliamentary elections overshadow French political thought.

NONALIGNED SET UP LINKS TO OUTSIDERS

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka, Aug. 13 (AP)—The nonaligned movement, veering from its 15-year-old policy of aloofness from cold-war politics, today established its first formal links with countries in regional military alliances.

Authoritative sources said that Portugal of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, the Philippines of the Southeast Asian Treaty Organization and Rumania of the Warsaw Pact had been admitted as guests to next week's nonaligned summit conference here.

Also today, the preparatory conference of Foreign Ministers aired familiar charges that United States military bases in Cuba, Panama, and Puerto Rico "pose a threat to peace and security in the region."

In a draft resolution subject to change by the heads of government who meet here next week, conference participants charged the United States with having failed to fulfill postwar economic aid commitments to Vietnam. The draft also welcomed the "partial relaxation of the economic blockade of Cuba," but called for its "total and unconditional removal."

BFO is a remarkable — and we like to think — unique operation.

We started in the men's clothing business 60 years ago, as manufacturers. So we know the clothing industry inside and out. That kind of experience is rarely equalled in our field.

When we opened BFO, we drew on our expertise to introduce a totally new concept in men's clothing:

To offer the finest clothing obtainable from the world's foremost manufacturers and designers, at miracle low prices.

To offer vast selections — thousands of suits, sport coats and slacks in the newest, current-season fashions exclusively.

To offer a Money-Back Guarantee on everything we sell.

To offer a "None-higher" Price Policy that establishes a firm price ceiling for all your clothes.

How does BFO do it?

Fine makers who need cash, or find they're overproduced, come to us. And get a check in 24 hours. Manufacturers who want to keep their men and machines busy between seasons come to us.

Mozambique Reports 618 Died In Rhodesia Raid on Guerrillas

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Mozambique Government said today that at least 618 persons were killed in a Rhodesian raid on guerrilla camps inside Mozambique earlier this week, double the figure reported by Rhodesia.

The Rhodesian Government in announcing the raid Tuesday said 300 black nationalist guerrillas had been killed, together with 30 Mozambican soldiers and 10 civilians.

The Mozambique radio made only brief mention of the attack.

The broadcast said the Rhodesian force attacked the village of Nhagomia, about 25 miles inside Mozambique, with armored cars and other vehicles.

The radio said the Rhodesians wore the same type of uniforms as the Mozambican Army and said the raiders killed "completely defenseless" men, women and children.

The attack was considered a major stepup of the conflict between Rhodesia's white minority Government and Mozambique, which is helping to train guerrillas to fight the Salisbury regime.

The radio said the Rhodesians destroyed a bridge across the Punguè River between Chimoio, formerly Vila Pery, and Tete.

Mozambique and Rhodesia share a 300-mile border, and Mozambique has served as a jumpoff point for attacks on Rhodesia since the fighting began four years ago.

U.N. to Investigate

GENEVA, Aug. 13 (Reuters)—The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees asked his representative in Mozambique today to investigate reports that refugees may have been among victims of a Rhodesian attack inside the country last Sunday.

A spokesman said the High Commissioner, Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, was "gravely concerned" about reports that Rhodesian troops attacked one of three settlements for refugees from Rhodesia supported by the United Nations.

Haig Talks With Juan Carlos

...er of the Johannesburg detachment suggested that security forces may be stretched thinner than the Government is willing to admit.

In addition to the arrest of Mrs. Mandela and others in Soweto today, there were arrests in three towns in the eastern cape region, 500 miles south of Johannesburg. Those detained in King William's town, Grahamstown and Port Elizabeth included prominent figures in the South African Students' Organization and the Black Peoples Convention.

Since her husband's imprisonment 14 years ago, Mrs. Mandela has become a symbol, speaking out against apartheid and leading protests. Last Sunday she said in an interview that the time for minor concessions by the Government had passed.

In the interview she demanded full representation in Parliament for South Africa's 18 million blacks. "It is now becoming accepted in the township that there is no longer any possibility of conciliation," he said.

Soweto sources said that Mrs. Mandela was arrested at her home in the township under the Suppression of Communism Act, which provides for detention without trial of those suspected of having promoted Communist aims.

Her husband, who is being held on Robben Island, a prison fortress off Cape Town, was the leader of the African National Congress, outlawed in 1960.

Arson attempts were reported today on three schools near Pietersburg, 180 miles north of Johannesburg, and on a beer hall and a school at Weenen, near Durban, 350 miles to the southeast.

The security police, who made today's arrests, are in a separate organization that operates under special laws that eliminate judicial review of their actions. They have arrested scores of people, most of them black, since June, when the original upheavals began over the use of the Afrikaans language in Soweto schools. Those arrested by the security police are usually held in solitary confinement without access to relatives or lawyers.

U.S. GREETS STAND ON RULE BY BLACKS

But Washington's Statement on South Africa Speech Cites Other Problems

By BERNARD GWERTZMAN
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 — The United States said today that it welcomed South Africa's expressions of support for majority rule in Rhodesia but cautioned that difficulties to a negotiated solution of the Rhodesian issue still remained.

In a carefully worded statement on Foreign Minister Hilgard Muller's address in Durban to the National Party congress, the State Department applauded Mr. Muller's comments on Rhodesia as well as his suggestion that progress would be achieved this month toward independence for South-West Africa, also known as Namibia.

"We have seen the text of the South African Foreign Minister's speech of Aug. 13 and we note in particular the reference to Rhodesia and Namibia," the State Department said. "We find the statements which the Foreign Minister made to be encouraging."

"Nevertheless, there still remain difficulties ahead in finding solutions to the problems of southern Africa," it continued. "The United States Government intends to proceed with its efforts toward their resolution."

Mr. Muller's speech was widely publicized by the South African Embassy as a crucial policy breakthrough in its open endorsement of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger's African policies.

In effect, South Africa announced publicly for the first time that it supported a solution to the Rhodesian issue on the basis of majority rule by blacks with adequate protection of white minority rights.

That has been the position espoused by Mr. Kissinger and British officials as part of a stepped-up effort to bring pressure on the white minority regime of Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia.

U.S. Cautions

South African officials—who themselves lead a white minority Government—have privately said majority rule was needed in Rhodesia to prevent racial war and an excuse for Soviet intervention. But the South African Embassy and American officials said this was the first time a South African cabinet-level official has publicly endorsed majority rule in Rhodesia.

What was unclear—and the cause for caution in Washington—was how far the Government of Prime Minister John Vorster was ready to go to carry out the policy of majority rule. Nothing was said in the speech about cutting off South Africa's economic or military ties to Rhodesia.

In his speech, clearly aimed at winning American commendation as well as popular acceptance in South Africa, Mr. Muller stressed that Mr. Kissinger in his Aug. 2 speech in Boston had underscored the need for protection of white minority rights in a new constitutional formula.

He indicated that South Africa would be willing to discuss further with the United States ways of guaranteeing "the safety, and economic and political interests and rights of the white minority, constitutionally and otherwise."

Mr. Muller devoted only the last 100 words of the speech to the pressing question of South-West Africa.

The South African Ambassador, R. F. Botha, had suggested yesterday that Mr. Muller would make a major statement on South-West Africa, but that section of the speech was limited to a suggestion that "further progress" toward independence would be announced by the end of the month.

Test of Good Faith

The speech itself has been the subject of intense discussions between the United States and South Africa for many weeks.

The black southern African states have pressed the United State to show that South Africa is ready to make a "commitment" to Africa by using its influence to get Mr. Smith to accept the British-American formula calling for majority rule over a two-year period. In turn, Mr. Kissinger asked South Africa for a "commitment."

In addition, the black Africans have said that a test of South Africa's good faith would be its compliance on South-West African.

If the black Africans seem ready to accept South Africa's good intentions, Mr. Kissinger plans to go back to Africa and include a stop in South Africa for further discussions on the political-economic formula for southern Africa.

This would include a step-by-step program for eventual black rule in Rhodesia, vast economic aid by the United States and Europe to Rhodesia and other southern African countries and guarantees endorsed by South Africa and the black Africans for the rights of Rhodesians. The South-West Africa situation would also have to be on the way to solution.

Another major question is whether the upsurge of disorders in black areas of South Africa will cause black African states to be reluctant to deal with the South Africans.

Excerpts From South African's Addr

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13—Following are excerpts from the text of a speech by South Africa's Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Hilgard Muller, made today in Durban, South Africa, on Rhodesia and South-West Africa. The text was provided by the South African Embassy.

Dr. Hilgard Muller

I wish to say unambiguously that I am concerned about the escalation of violence in Rhodesia, for the direction in which the terrorist struggle is developing is precisely what the Russians and Cubans are sitting and waiting for—an excuse.

It would be disastrous for South Africa and the free world if a situation was allowed to arise which would give the Russians a justification to intervene elsewhere on the pretense that they were acting as champions of black Africa. I therefore hope that the parties concerned and all others who can influence the situation will do everything possible to prevent such a tragedy.

There is no better evidence of what could be achieved by a purposeful joint effort to find a peaceful solution for a complicated political problem than the way in which we strove together with Dr. Kaunda [President Kenneth D. Kaunda of Zambia] and his presidential colleagues towards a peaceful solution to the Rhodesia question.

A Kissinger Admission

It is certainly not the fault of Mr. Vorster and the President's [Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa and Mr. Kaunda] that the first effort was unsuccessful. There is also no reason whatsoever why we should throw in our hands, particularly in the light of most recent developments. Throughout the free world there was appreciation for the constructive action taken by the African leaders, including our Prime Minister.

While testifying before a subcommittee of the United States Senate, after his recent visit to a number of African countries, Dr. Kissinger openly admitted that practically all the African leaders he had met had expressed their appreciation of the efforts by our Prime Minister to find peaceful solutions for political problems in southern Africa.

Speaking in the South African Senate in May of this year, I said that the South African Government would continue to do whatever it could to make a peaceful solution in Rhodesia possible. I appealed to the West to be more enterprising and to make it easier and more attractive for the Rhodesians, white and black, and to go out of their way to encourage them to work for a peaceful solution for their problems.

'New American Approach'

This appeal did not pass unheeded. There was encouraging reaction on the part of the United States. Discussions took place between Dr. Kissinger and our Ambassador, and this led to fruitful discussions between Dr. Kissinger and Mr. Vorster in Western Germany on the 21st and 22d of June, in which I had the privilege to participate.

Last week the Secretary of State disclosed that the United States were also engaged in frequent consultations with the African states most directly concerned as well as with the British and Western European governments. In an important policy statement made in Boston on Aug. 2, Dr. Kissinger dealt at great length with what might be described as the new American approach to Africa, including the implications of great-power military intervention in southern Africa.

With regard to Rhodesia, the Secretary of State said that he could obviously not go into details about delicate and complicated negotiations which are still in a formative stage. He admitted that the task was formidable but by no means impossible.

While it is therefore still uncertain what the outcome of Dr. Kissinger's deliberations with other interested governments will be, and although it is not for the South African Government to determine how the problem should be tackled and solved, I want to declare once again that the South African Government welcomes this initiative and that we are prepared to comply with the request to demonstrate our commitment to Africa by giving our full support for a peaceful outcome.

Coexistence and Cooperation

In his speech last week, the Secretary of State repeated that the United States supported the British proposal for majority rule in Rhodesia within two years. In addition to this confirmation of America's well-known approach, a new element was introduced in Dr. Kissinger's speech, which is both interesting and encouraging. He went out of his way to stress the necessity not to ignore the rights of the minority in Rhodesia.

Thus he explained that the United States had "stressed the importance of racial peace and equality, including minority rights." He said they were doing their best to encourage a settlement "in which black and white can coexist and cooperate for Africa's future on a basis of equality, dignity and peace." He appealed to the leaders of black African states "to help ease the transition to a government based on majority rule and minority rights."

Dr. Kissinger appealed to the Rhodesian authorities to begin urgent talks "while the future of the white population can still be negotiated peacefully and guarantees are yet attainable."

Contrasts in Policies

Further on, he continued "that peace and stability can only be built upon a settlement that takes into account the legitimate interests of all the groups and races involved," to which he added: "As we defend majority rule we must not neglect minority rights."

These quotations leave no doubt that the United States is not advocating the complete and unconditional surrender of the white minority in Rhodesia to the black majority. What should our attitude be towards the direction in which Dr. Kissinger and the United States are apparently moving?

We must hope their efforts will be crowned with success. As far as the presumption that a majority government is inevitable is concerned—it is not for us to adopt a position. Rhodesia has over the years had another policy which differs fundamentally from our policy of separate development, separate freedoms.

On Rhodesia's Majority

Mr. Smith [Prime Minister Ian D. Smith of Rhodesia] stated for example last year in public "that every constitution we have had in Rhodesia has been based on the principle of majority rule"—with certain qualifications. In reply to a question by Richard Kershaw of the BBC whether eventual majority rule is precluded, he replied: "No, certainly we have never ever said that majority rule isn't something which is inherent in the Rhodesian Constitution."

In light of all this nobody can expect South Africa to withhold its support from the efforts by Dr. Kissi others simply becau ity rule is the po which they proceed.

At this stage w hope that it would sible to guarantee and economic and interests and right white minority com ally and otherwise way that they would feel convinc safe and good fu for them in their such a solution will be a powerful tion to general the whole of south

Kissinger's Stateme

Following are excerpts from a speech in w retary of State Henry A. Kissinger outlined Unit policies on Rhodesia and South-West Africa. The delivered in Boston Aug. 2, dealt with overall A African relations.

Late last year the situation in southern Africa took on a new and more critical dimension with implications not only for the peace, independence and unity of Africa but for global peace and stability. For the first time since the end of the colonial era in the early 1960's external interventions had begun to overwhelm an essentially African problem. The political evolution of Angola was slipping out of African control toward determination by outsiders. The United States was prevented by Congressional action from assisting its friends in their efforts to counter foreign intervention and negotiate a compromise African solution.

After Angola, there was concern that the precedent of external intervention would spread to Rhodesia, where a guerrilla war was already taking place. The white minority regime there —representing only 4 percent of the population—is not recognized by a single government in the world. The negotiations which it had conducted with black leaders had broken down and guerrilla actions had intensified. Even moderate African lead-the position of Rhodesia's ruling minority against the country's six million blacks. In addition to widespread political sympathy, many of Rhodesia's 270,000 whites have family connections here in South Africa.

Dr. Muller cited Soviet intervention in the Angolan civil war as an example of what might happen if efforts to reach a peaceful settlement in Rhodesia failed. He said that recent events in Rhodesia, which have included a Rhodesian raid into Mozambique that is said to have resulted in the deaths of 340 Mozambican guerrillas and a counterstrike against a Rhodesian border town, made the danger very clear.

Concerned About Violence

"I wish to say unambiguously that I am concerned about the escalation of violence in Rhodesia, for the direction in which the terrorist struggle is developing is exactly what the Russians and Cubans are sitting and waiting for—an excuse," the minister said. "I therefore hope that the parties concerned and all others who can influence the situation will do everything possible to prevent such a tragedy."

He drew applause from the party delegates when he criticized Western governments for a failure of resolve in the face of Communist expansionism. This has been a familiar theme in Government speeches since South Africa's abortive intervention in the war between nationalist factions for control of Angola, the West African country that had become independent of Portugal in November.

Officials have implied that the United States inveigled Pretoria into committing troops to that war and that the troops were forced into an embarrassing withdrawal when the United States Congress cut financial aid to the anti-Communist forces in Angola.

New Soviet Moves Feared

"In actual fact, the lack of initiative, purposefulness and coordination in the ranks of the West enabled the Russians to strengthen their own position at the cost of the west," Dr. Muller said. "It must be accepted that Russia and its satellites will increasingly concentrate on establishing themselves in young and politically unstable states in Africa and elsewhere, as happened in Angola."

The Foreign Minister said South Africa's warnings about Communist intentions in the region had played a part in prompting discussions between Pretoria and Washington, which included the meeting between Mr. Kissinger and Prime Minister John Vorster in Bavaria in June. He said the discussions had been "fruitful."

Guarantee and Compensation

While noting Mr. Kissinger's support for majority rule in Rhodesia, Dr. Muller said there had been an "encouraging" stress in the Secretary's foreign-policy speech in Boston last week on the need to protect the rights of the white Rhodesian minority. The Kissinger speech, Dr. Muller said, made it clear that "the United States is not advocating the complete and unconditional surrender of the white minority in Rhodesia to the black majority."

Answering criticism that many conservatives here have expressed—that South Africa is putting pressure on Rhodesia to accept black rule while refusing blacks political rights at home — Dr. Muller said it was not for South Africa to say whether a negotiated settlement in Rhodesia should provide for majority rule. However, he pointed out that Prime Minister Ian D. Smith himself had accepted majority rule in principle—"with certain qualifications."

Versions of the Kissinger plan that have been floated publicly have suggested that the Secretary, acknowledging the difficulty of enforcing any political or property guarantees for Rhodesia's whites, is concentrating instead on guarantees that would provide compensation for their properties and an opportunity to resettle elsewhere, including in South Africa.

Dr. Muller's speech indicated, however, that South Africa was pressing for "guarantees in place," as they have been called here. The minister said South Africa was hoping that a settlement would protect the rights of whites "in such a way that they themselves would feel convinced that a safe and good future exists for them in their country."

landlord unleashes a Taiwan of rental agents, all of them lean and hungry for a commission, with names like Rick and Rita and Buzz and Bernie. The hungriest don't send their clients; they conscript and lead them to your lair, an army of refugees, critics, chortlers, whiners, weepers, desperadoes, naifs: How many closets? Maybe if it were painted beige . . . You are foreclosed, self-evicted, lame-duck, an impostor. How dare they say the kitchen is too small, the shower needs new curtains, we can always knock down that revolting partition?

Amazingly, you feel an insult coming on like swine flu. You are proprietary. You'd hoped to leave the potted guilt behind. But you had also hoped to pack the good vibrations. Will they travel? The movers will probably break them, as you are breaking your lease. Will the walls you leave behind care what is hung on them? They should. The walls have earrings.

You become a salesman of territory no longer yours. See the trees? Our courtyard is sort of Roman: photosynthesis, Spanish music, construction noise, distraught dog, not to mention a rock composer. Yes, there's plenty of heat and hot water. No, insofar as roaches are concerned. Yes, the building is secure. No, you are only leaving because otherwise they might catch up with you.

To those about to have a child, you commend Elizabeth Bing. To those with cats, you suggest the Pet Bowl on Columbus. To those who tend to run out of everything crucial at the wrong time, why not Zabar's? Asked what the landlord's like, you say you've only met him once—in court. Oh? Yes, your tenants' committee took him there, and he is making amends, and one meets lots of nice people on the tenants' committee.

Understandably, rental agents don't like your chit-chat about the landlord. But if someone is to possess, to inherit, your good vibrations, you have a responsibility. You don't let that someone out the door without describing the tenants' committee. And you also insist on knowing something about the someone. What does he or she do? Are they worthy?

The someones are as various as their hopes and sneers: a lawyer, a theatrical designer, a student of anthropology, a liberated turnip, one commune, two divorced women with moppets, three young-marrieds, six candidates for Osner's and Kessler's, and so on. You personally would prefer the widow from Philadelphia who wants to start a consulting service for other widows, advising them on how to package their financial affairs. Between Elizabeth Bing and the undertaker, we need a buffer.

We. So there is a we. To the widow you commend The Only Child down the street as a place to eat, because blacks and whites there make light coffee of their mix. Then it suddenly occurs to you: Only whites have applied for your apartment. In fact, you know of just one black tenant in the building. Why? How come it never came up at a tenants' committee meeting? Ah, but it's time to be moving on.

Bureau Executive Admits He Converted Property of the Government to His Use

By JOHN M. CREWDSON

John P. Dunphy, a 47-year-old executive with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, pleaded guilty yesterday to a charge that he had converted Government property to his own use in his job. He was forced to resign.

Mr. Dunphy thus became the first agent in the bureau's history to be convicted of a criminal offense, in this case a misdemeanor. The plea was entered at a closed hearing in Federal District Court in Washington and was announced by the bureau.

He is also the first agent to face criminal charges arising out of an extensive investigation of the bureau's operations, which is now being conducted by the Department of Justice.

Until last night, when he resigned from the bureau, Mr. Dunphy held a $37,800-a-year post as head of the bureau laboratory's exhibits section. He had been with the bureau for 28 years.

A bureau spokesman said that Mr. Dunphy's resignation "was requested and accepted in connection with the bureau's internal investigation" of wrongdoing by some of its employees.

In addition to the operations of the F.B.I. laboratory, Justice Department lawyers are investigating the possible misappropriation of bureau funds by some past and present executives and a number of burglaries carried out by agents in recent years.

The investigation that led to the charges against Mr. Dunphy is being conducted by John M. Dowd, one of the Justice Department's organized crime specialists, and is under the supervision of the department's new Office of Professional Responsibility.

The precise nature of the charges to which Mr. Dunphy admitted his guilt today could not be learned. The bureau laboratory's exhibits section constructs models for use in courtroom presentations, among other things, but former bureau officials have said that it was also used for such unofficial jobs as building an addition to the home of J. Edgar Hoover, the late F.B.I. director.

Robert J. Havel, a Justice Department spokesman, announced Mr. Dunphy's plea.

In the plea, Mr. Dunphy conceded that he had converted to his own use lumber and other materials valued at $100 or less, according to a Justice Department source.

That offense can draw a fine of $1,000, one year in jail, or both. No date has been set for sentencing, Mr. Havel said.

Meanwhile, in a related development, it was learned yesterday that the Justice Department has agreed not to prosecute at least two former F.B.I. agents in New York City in exchange for their testimony about a number of burglaries carried out by bureau agents in New York in 1972 and 1973.

According to several individuals in and out of Government who are familiar with the Justice Department's rapidly developing investigation of the burglaries, both of those granted immunity were members of a special squad set up to track down fugitives in the Weather Underground organization, which has taken the responsibility for a number of bombings in the last several years.

The Justice Department's civil rights division has thus far identified about 30 members of the F.B.I.'s so-called "fugitive squad" who, according to documents recently discovered in the bureau's New York office, burglarized property of friends and relatives of members of the Weather group in efforts to learn of the whereabouts of the fugitives.

Sources have said that several of those agents, a number of whom reportedly have since resigned from the bureau, have been negotiating with the civil rights division in hopes of trading their testimony for immunity from Federal prosecution.

The civil rights division, which is headed by Assistant Attorney General J. Stanley Pottinger, is known to be chiefly interested in establishing whether F.B.I. supervisors and executives in Washington were aware that agents in the field had carried out burglaries in search of evidence long after 1966, when J. Edgar Hoover, the late F.B.I. director, ordered the practice halted.

Justice Department lawyers have also begun to notify other present and former F.B.I. agents in New York and elsewhere that they, too, are suspected of committing break-ins even though no bureau documents have yet been found that implicate them, according to sources in the department.

According to one official, the Justice Department, in interviewing several agents, has developed evidence of other illegalities, in addition to the burglaries, that may also become a focus of prosecutions.

The two men granted immunity thus far, one of whom has left the bureau, are expected to appear soon before a Federal grand jury in New York City.

The Justice spokesman confirmed only that Mr. Pottinger was "approving immunity" in connection with his investigation of the F.B.I.

Dance: The Adagio Style

Zina Yevtikova and Luis Villanueva in Graceful Appearance at Music Hall

By ANNA KISSELGOFF

Adagio dancing has tended to be associated with music halls and nightclub acts in the United States. But in the Soviet Union this blend of acrobatics, ballet and gymnastics has been regarded as an art form that is equal to other arts on the concert stage.

One of the top Soviet artists in this genre was Zina Yevtikova, who emigrated to the United States in 1974 and who is currently appearing at Radio City Music Hall with her new American partner, Luis Villanueva.

Like Natalia Makarova, Miss Yevtikova was given the title of Honored Artist of the Russian Soviet Federated Socialist Republic, and she and Miss Makarova frequently shared the bill when they appeared in the "Russian Festival" variety programs that Soviet cultural authorities sent abroad.

Miss Yevtikova is a contemporary of Rudolf Nureyev and a 1958 Russian concert program shows her billed above the young Nureyev, who had just graduated from the Kirov Ballet School. After that, Miss Yevtikova appeared on tour throughout the world. A gymnast who graduated from Leningrad's Institute of Physical Culture, she also studied ballet. Yet unlike the recent teen-aged superstars of the Olympics, Miss Yevtikova seeks to create art with acrobatic elements, rather than acrobatics that look artistic.

At the Music Hall, she and Mr. Vallanueva, who once danced in American Ballet Theater, are integrated into a stage show with a circus theme. After Peter Gennaro's brief prelude in which Mr. Villanueva plays the lion to Miss Yevtikova's charming lion tamer, they get down to business.

This is a lyrical duet, created by Miss Yevtikova to Debussy, in which the woman is maneuvered in lifts, tumbles, splits and arabesques by her partner. Miss Yevtikova is as apt to stand in arabesque in the palm of Mr. Villanueva's hand as to do a ballet pirouette, on her toe shoes on the floor.

This refusal to make a distinction between ground and air accounts for the smoothness of the performance. There is a beautiful and constant flow of movement from ground to air in which Mr. Villanueva's strength acts as a fine foil for Miss Yevtikova's delicacy. There are no circus tricks here, just a special and graceful way of dancing.

Zina Yevtikova and Luis Villanueva.

HISPANIC ACTORS STAGE FESTIVAL

Groups From Around World Are at New York Theater

Joseito Tirado leaves a rustic life working on his father's sugar-cane field in Puerto Rico for the land of plenty, New York City. Here he has trouble finding his friends, trouble getting a job and finally trouble with the police. He ends up wishing he were back in the sun on his father's farm.

This is the story line of the play, "Que Encontré en Nueva York" ("What I Found in New York"), by Teatro 4, a New York-based Puerto Rican group that is one of 12 appearing this week in the first Latin American Popular Theater Festival at the Shakespeare Festival's Public Theater.

"Last summer we realized that the Lafin Theater of New York City was completely isolated from Latin America and Puerto Rico," said William Nieves, coordinator of the festival. "So we decided to get together directors, actors and the public as an important exchange for Latins and New Yorkers."

The workshops of the festival, at 300 East Fourth Street, include films, music and discussions on the theater.

Theatrical performances begin at 8 P.M. at 425 Lafayette Street, near Astor Place. The festival is sponsored by Aspira of New York Inc., the Center for Puerto Rican Studies, Friends of Puerto Rico, Grupo Guazabara, Teatro 4 and Teatro Jurutungo, with support from the New York State Council of the Arts and in cooperation with Joseph Papp and the New York Festival's Public Theater. Admission is $2.50.

Blues on Oboe by Yusef Lateef Enhanced by Barron, on Piano

One of the more fascinating jazz experiences is hearing the blues played on oboe by Yusef Lateef. The instrument, with its wry, plaintively singing quality, is an ideal vehicle for the blues, and Mr. Lateef, a superb technician and a musician with deep, sure jazz instincts, is a disciplined and expressive performer. He concluded his first set at the Bottom Line Thursday evening with an oboe version of "In the Evening When the Sun Goes Down," building a performance charged with tremendous intensity that brought the cheering audience to its feet.

It was, presumably, a calculated bit of programming because, until then, Mr. Lateef had kept the spotlight primarily on his pianist, Kenny Barron. Mr. Barron is heard around town quite a bit as a sideman, as a soloist and occasionally as leader of his own combo. But he is rarely heard to as good advantage, both as pianist and composer, as he is with Mr. Lateef.

At the heart of Mr. Lateef's program were two pieces by Mr. Barron on which he had opportunities to display, in unaccompanied passages, his beautiful execution combined with a stimulating use of breaks and stop-time that filled his performances with energetic rhythms. Mr. Lateef supported him strongly on flute and tenor saxophone, and the two other members of the quartet, Bob Cunningham, bass, and Tootie Heath, drums, provided essential colors and accents. But there was no denying Mr. Barron's primacy in these pieces or Mr. Lateef's wisdom in sharing the spotlight to this extent.

The Bobby Hutcherson Quartet, led by the vibraharpist, opened the program with a heavy-handed series of undistinguished, riff-based pieces.

Fire-Death Suspect Seized

MIAMI, Aug. 13 (UPI)—A 19-year-old drifter was charged today with arson and 10 counts of murder for allegedly setting fire to an old residential hotel so he could loot the residents' meager possessions. Seven persons died during the April 3 fire and three others later died of injuries. The suspect arrested is Daniel Turner Jr., described as a drifter from Fernandina Beach.

In his instructions to the bureau, Mr. Levi emphasized "that Dade County has the principal responsibility for the investigation," the spokesman said.

Meanwhile, a lawyer for Mr. Roselli today discounted the possibility of a connection between his client's death and reported recent meetings between his client and West Coast crime figures.

Mr. Roselli at one time was known as the West Coast lieutenant of the Chicago mobster Sam Giancana, who was also involved in the C.I.A. assassination plots against Mr. Castro.

Mr. Giancana was murderd, in June 1975, shortly before he was to testify before the Senate investigators.

Aide to Giancana

The reports about meetings with West Coast crime figures had prompted speculation that Mr. Roselli was killed in retaliation for his atempts to make inroads into the Los Angeles underworld.

But Mr. Roselli's lawyer, Leslie Scherr, said that Mr. Roselli, who was 70 years old, was too old to become involved in organized crime again and was concentrating on being a model citizen in an effort to avoid deportation.

Mr. Roselli disappeared on July 28 on his way to a golf game in Plantation, Fla.

Opera: 'Figaro,' 'Egisto' at Santa Fe

By PETER G. DAVIS

Special to The New York Times

SANTA FE, N. M., Aug. 13 —The Santa Fe Opera is essentially an ensemble company that shows itself to best advantage in works requiring teamwork rather than the services of one or two superstars. This season's brilliant new production of Virgil Thomson's panoramic view of 19th-century America, "The Mother of Us All," is an excellent case in point.

Two other productions in this summer's repertory, both holdovers from previous seasons, did not quite reach this level perhaps, but each of them — Cavalli's "L'Egisto" and Mozart's "The Marriage of Figaro"—have a degree of stylishness and integration of performance values that one seldom sees in American companies with less sense of ensemble.

"L'Egisto" was first staged in Santa Fe in 1974—in fact this Baroque opera had not been previously revived anywhere since its premiere in 1643. Raymond Leppard, the English musicologist-conductor, reconstructed the work from Cavalli's short score, fleshing out the bare bones with the same kind of lush instrumentation and keen ear for musical-dramatic effects that he has brought to a number of other 17th-century operas by Monteverdi and Cavalli.

Seen for the second time, in John Cox's delicate production and Allen Charles Klein's stylized Baroque sets, "L'Egisto" retains much of the delicious quality that it had in 1974, although the piece itself now seems rather too much of a good thing.

The wildly complicated plot somewhat resembles "A Midsummer's Night's Dream," a farrago of sensuous intrigues involving a pair of mixed-up lovers, a parcel of meddlesome deities from Mount Olympus and an impish Cupid who starts all the trouble. Cavalli's tuneful score, at least in Mr. Leppard's deft arrangement, is a sweet, ingenious and often gorgeous confection, but some judicious pruning would help speed up the dramatic case.

Several members of the cast repeated their roles of two years back: James Bowman (Lidio), Ellen Shade (Climene), Douglas Perry (Dema) and Faith Esham (Cupid) were as good if not better than before. Newcomers to the opera Linn Maxwell (Clori) and Jerold Norman (Egisto), unfortunately were less vocally accomplished than their predecessors, although Lenus Carlson (Ipparco) proved to be a positive addition.

Santa Fe's "Figaro" has more energy than refinement. Bliss Hebert's production encourages a great deal of boisterous stage action and concentrates on developing sharply drawn character studies. The performance yesterday was confidently acted by all hands, and the drama was constantly propelled forward by a cast of passionately involved interacting personalities.

Musically, there were numerous rough edges, partly due to Robert Baustian's rather graceless conducting. Still there was much to enjoy, particularly Sheri Greenawald's Susana, and intriguingly sensual, even dangerous, creature in a refreshing departure from the usual arch soubrette that one generally sees in the role; Lepus Carlson's arrogantly willful Count and Faith Esham's mischievous Cherubino. These three also provided the most finished singing of the evening.

Leona Mitchell may very well be a striking Countess some day, but at the moment her voice and conception of the part are too immature to capture all the subtle nuances of this great lady. Joseph McKee's Figaro was sprightly but vocally quite raw. Elaine Bonazzi (Marcellina), Andrew Foldi (Bartolo) and Douglas Perry (Basilio) made fine comic capital out of their briefer but important assignments.

Screen: 'Futureworld'

Science-Fiction Robots in Dominant Roles

By RICHARD EDER

"Futureworld" is a film about robots and, evidently, for robots. It is as much fun as running barefoot through Astroturf.

A sequel to "Westworld," the film once again deals with a skeptical reporter who uncovers dirty doings in a great pleasure garden of the future known as Delos.

If they pay a great deal of money, people can go to Delos (by Laker Airways, apparently—a dubious plug in view of what eventually happens there) and live a fantasy life in one of its sections. These are devoted respectively to recreating the Old West, the Middle Ages and space travel. Robots looking exactly like real people provide a variety of services: sex, for instance, or convincing-looking Indians or knights for the clients to kill.

In the earlier film the reporter discovered that some defect in circuitry was causing the robots to kill the customers. In "Futureworld," which opened yesterday at showcase theaters, the same reporter, Chuck Browning, goes back and discovers something far worse: a plot to use the facilities of Delos to get control of all the important people in the world.

Browning and his sidekick, Tracy Ballard, go to Delos, accompanied by a planeload of important prospective victims: a Russian general, an Arab sheik, an influential Japanese. The latter plunge into the fun—the Russian imagines himself a czarist general, the Japanese, a knight-in-armor-with-camera —while Browning and Ballard investigate the plumbing.

After lots of running and hot-breathed pursuit the pair discover what the viewer discovered at least a half-hour earlier: that all these world-leader types are being killed and look-alike robots are being returned in their place. This, as one scientist explains, allows them to be operated by remote-control in the interests of world peace and reason.

It is all the most ordinary kind of hardware science fiction, full of computers and empty of thought. It features miles and miles of tubes and pipes and valves and as Tracy—who otherwise mostly says "Let's get out of here"—intelligently observes: "It is about as exciting as a visit to the waterworks."

As the manager of the place, Arthur Hill mugs sleek villainy. Blythe Danner, as Tracy, and Peter Fonda as Chuck have absolutely nothing to do. Starring in "Futureworld" must be the actor's equivalent of going on welfare.

MISS BOWDEN OFFERS A HUMOROUS DANCE

The development of modern dance has been a collection of personal sagas, great and small. Each has contributed something to the serious theater-dance form that agrees mainly—on the principal of fierce individuality. Sallie Bowden is one of the lighter-hearted spirits in the crusade, and Thursday evening she presented her latest contribution, ironically titled, "The Wonderful World of Modern Dance, or the Amazing Story of the Pie, Part II," at the Construction Company Studio.

Miss Bowden's current concerns are with the weight and the directional pull of gesture. She initiated a movement and then followed it to some logical or illogical end. At times she was in thrall to the direction indicated by a sweeping arm that seemed to drag the rest of the body behind itself. At another moment she tested the balance point of her body as it stretched out in an attitude. In all she was concerned with basics.

Between danced episodes she read questions from a yellow sheet of paper that rhetorically asked for audience attitudes toward a murder under a variety of extenuating circumstances. The mix of words, movement and bursts of popular music from past and present, though, remained at odds with one another.

No resolution was offered, perhaps none exists and one should only concentrate on the self-involved moment. There were of course, no pliés evident anywhere, but Miss Bowden's rarified sense of humor has its own compensations.

Both the work by Mr. Beatty and Mr. Truitte showed the company as providing the very special springboard for the dancer.

"Phoebe Show" has its own kind of energy and is very faithfully danced by an ensemble featuring Ulysses Dove and Enid Britton.

In "Liberian Suits" t he company easily and elegantly went through its paces led by Dudley Williams, Judith Jamison and Melvin Jones. The work looked containing and handsome. This season Ailey is definitely celebrating Ellington, but also in a way, is celebrating itself.

Disputed Indian Statue On Exhibit in California

PASADENA, Calif., Aug. 13 (AP) — A 10th-century bronze statue which was taken out of India about 20 years ago went on display here this week, after a long ownership battle between the Indian Government and the Norton Simon Foundation.

Officials believe the statue was smuggled out of India in the mid-1950's, but while India lists it as stolen property, Mr. Simon says "There is no doubt in our minds that the Shivapuram Nataraja was not stolen."

Under an agreement reached last April, it will be exhibited in Mr. Simon's museum for up to 10 years and then it will be returned to India.

Another part of the agreement allows Mr. Simon to exhibit permanently a collection of other Indian art pieces that he quietly gathered in the last year. The exhibit is "far beyond the greatest collection of Indian art outside India," Mr. Simon said.

The event is sponsored by the Apartment Gallery, whose artists will be represented, and the Neighborhood Association for Intercultural Affairs.

PACE SEFTER Rain or shine, the season's final walking tour presented by the downtown Pace University takes off tomorrow through Greenwich Village, meandering through the historic, mews and alleys of the picturesque section, with some of the important and lesser-known landmarks included. The guide for the occasion is Joseph Hores, reference librarian at Pace. The group meets at 11 A.M. on the steps of the Jefferson Market Library, Avenue of the Americas at 10th Street. The tab is $3.50, and $2.50 for children under 12 years.

Enthusiastic response to these excursions has prompted resumption of the school's tours of Lower Manhattan and the East Side, as well as the theatrical tours of the former Rialto downtown, in late September and October. Reservations are already being accepted at 285-3627.

TRIBAL TONES "Songs and Legends of the American Indian" is the theme of a free concert tomorrow at 3 P.M. by Hoté Casella, mezzo soprano, in the third-floor auditorium of the Seaman's Church Institute, 15 State Street (opposite Battery Park). The Cherokee Indian singer has frequently performed in local recitals, on national tour and on television. Her program tomorrow will include ceremonial, love, work and play songs, in addition to lullabies and nature songs representing the life and culture of numerous Indian tribes.

Ali, Frazier, Red Smith Honored

Muhammad Ali and Joe Frazier, who boxing talents have excited the sports world and Red Smith of The New York Times, who writes about their skills, were among the major award winners at the 51st Boxing Writers Association dinner at the Downtown Athletic Club last night.

Ali and Frazier jointly received the Edward J. Neil Award as "fighter of the year" for their title bout in Miami last October. It was the third award for each man and the second straight for Ali, the heavyweight champion. Ali, who is in training, was not present. His award was accepted by Herbert Muhammad, his manager.

Red Smith received the Nat Fleischer Award for "excellence in boxing journalism." Dan Daniel of The Ring (record book and magazine) received the James J. Walker Award for "long and meritorious service to boxing," and Eddie Futch, the manager of Frazier, received the Al Buck Award as "trainer of the year." Howard Davis Jr. of Glen Cove, L.I., was presented the Val Baker Award as the outstanding boxer in the Olympic Games at Montreal. Davis won the gold medal in the 135 division.

U.S. Athletes Win 5 Events in Track

TURKU, Finland, Aug. 13 (AP)—American track and field stars, led by four members of the Pacific Coast Club of San Jose, Calif., won five events tonight at the Paavo Nurmi Memorial Games.

Mac Wilkins, the Olympic champion and world record-holder, took the discus at 216 feet for his third victory in Europe in four days. Al Feuerbach put the shot 66 feet 8 inches. Jim Bolding ran the 400-meter intermediate hurdles in 47.87 seconds and Francie Larrieu was timed in 4:06.36 in the women's 1,500 meters.

The other American winner was Paul Geis of the Oregon Track Club, who was timed in 13:35.12 in the 5,000-meter run. Hatti Vainio of Finland was the runner-up in 13:37.41, and Lasse Viren of Finland, winner of the 5,000 and 10,000-meter runs in the last two Olympics, was third in 13:39.34.

Mike Boit of Kenya, who had competed for the Pacific Coast Club during his years at college in the United States, easily won the 1,500 meters in 3:38.29. Rick Wohlhuter of Chicago was far behind in 3:43.01.

Record $550,000 for Secretariat Colt

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N. Y., Aug. 13 (AP)—A record for a Saratoga yearling was set at the third session of the 56th annual Fasig-Tipton yearling sales last night when a colt by Secretariat sold for $550,000. The successful bidders were James Scully of Lexington, Ky., and Jerry Chige of Lawrence, N. Y., partners who also purchased a filly by Secretariat earlier in the evening for $175,000. The colt is a roan out of Show Stopper, a full sister to Raise A Native.

The mark easily surpassed the previous record of $350,000 set in 1974 for a colt by Tom Rolfe out of Shuvee who is still without a victory on the race track. Scully headed the partnership that purchased Wajima for $600,000 at the 1973 Keeneland sales. Wajima was syndicated last year for a world record of more than $7 million.

U.S. Rowers Gain Final in 7 of 11 Races

VILLACH, Austria, Aug. 13 (AP)—The United States will be represented in seven of 11 final races tomorrow in the world lightweight rowing championships and the world junior rowing championships on Lake Ossiach.

The American entries won or placed second in all of the semifinals today with one exception, the fours without coxswain, which finished last.

Larry Klecatsky of the New York A.C. won his single-scull semifinal heat in 7 minutes, 42.82 seconds, only slightly slower than the winning time of 7:42.08 by the Austrian boat in the other semifinal.

West Indies Cricket Mark Set

LONDON, Aug. 13 (Reuters)—England, facing a mammoth West Indies' first-inning total of 687 runs for eight wickets declared, had reached 34 for no wicket at the close on the second day of the fifth and final cricket test today. The West Indies total was its highest in history, beating the 681 for eight declared against England at Port of Spain 22 years ago.

Connors Triumphs Over Meiler

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 13 (UPI) — Top-seeded Jimmy Connors overcame three set points against him in the first set and rallied for a 7-5, 6-3 victory over West Germany's Karl Meiler today to reach the quarterfinals of the $157,000 national clay-court tennis championships.

Manuel Orantes, Eddie Dibbs and Brian Gottfried also gained the quarterfinals at the Racquet Club today, joining Guillermo Vilas, who did so yesterday.

But Raul Ramirez of Mexico was upset by a rising Australian star, Mark Edmondson, in their rain-delayed second-round match, 1-6, 7-6, 7-5 and Wojtek Fibak of Poland upset Jaime Fillol of Chile, 6-2, 6-0.

About an hour later, Britain's Buster Mottram eliminated Edmondson, 6-4, 6-3, to earn a quarterfinals spot opposite Fibak.

The women's quarterfinals also featured an upset, in which unseeded Kathy May of Beverly Hills, Calif., outlasted the No. 1 Lesley Hunt of Australia, 6-3, 3-6, 6-3.

Connors, who has dropped out of the doubles competition because of his back ailment, trailed Meiler, 3-5, in the first set. He won the ninth game but trailed, Love-40, in the next before winning the next five points to draw even at 5-5. He then broke Meiler and held his own serve to run out the set.

Playing mostly a baseline game, Connors won the last four games to take the second set. Meiler won just four points in those four games.

The Edmondson-Ramirez match was halted late yesterday by rain after a split of the first two sets. In the deciding set today, Ramirez got the first advantage, breaking Edmondson's service in the ninth game. Edmondson broke right back, however, held his own service and broke Ramirez once more when the Mexican Davis Cup ace netted a backhand.

Brigitte Cuypers of South Africa became the first player in women's singles to reach the semifinals, beating Laura Dupont of Charlotte, N.C., 6-2, 7-6.

Hungary, Soviet Union Split

MOSCOW, Aug. 13 (Reuters)—Hungary and the Soviet Union divided the first day's singles matches in the European Zone A Davis Cup final in Tbilisi today, the Soviet news agency Tass reported.

In the opening match, Alexander Metreveli defeated Janos Benick of Hungary, 6-3, 7-5, 6-3. Then Balazs Taroczy leveled the series for Hungary by beating Teimuraz Kakulia, 6-3, 6-3, 6-4.

Popularity Surge of U.S. Open Tennis Leav Some Longtime Fans on the Outside Looking

By NEIL AMDUR

The tennis explosion is producing unexpected fireworks over ticket demands for the United States Open championships.

Ticketholders who have held the same seat for more than 30 years at the West Side Tennis Club in Forest Hills, Queens now say their requests have not been renewed. Other loyalists claim that waiting for official order blanks cost them an opportunity to purchase seats for the final few days of the tournament, which will be held Sept. 1 through 12.

Officials of the United States Tennis Association conceded yesterday that a change in tournament management last spring, with the unexpected resignation of Bill Talbert as chairman, had delayed ticket distribution information.

"The status of the tournament chairman was up in the air for several weeks at such a time as the tournament committee realized they would be handling boxes and tickets," Pret Hadley, the publicity director for the U.S.T.A., said yesterday.

Talbert, however, insisted yesterday that the ticket problem developed because of inconsistent policies by the U.S.T.A.

"They contend that a ticket problem exists because tennis has become so popular," Talbert said. "The truth is the association had a number of opportunities to act on tickets as far back as February or March but never did. They forgot about the people who supported the event from the start."

Talbert said a U.S.T.A. memo had answered ticket inquiries earlier this year with a fictitious name, "T. Barnwell," and typified the association's "insensitivity" to potential ticketholders.

Hadley acknowledged that no one by the name of "T. Barnwell" was employed by the U.S.T.A. He said the name was used to classify ticket information requests.

"That's fine," Talbert countered, "except what happens when someone calls and asks for T. Barnwell and needs specific information? Tennis people prefer a personal touch."

Waiting for a Flyer

Lee Wanetick, a systems analyst from Forest Hills, said he regularly purchased tickets after receiving a tournament order blank. The blank, in the form of a flyer, usually arrived in February; this year, Wanetick said it did not come until July.

"I followed all the rules by waiting for the flyer and got screwed up by following the rules," Wanetick said. "By the time we mailed in our request, the tickets for the finals and semis were sold out. They should have at least told us they would be oversubscribed."

Gil Hall, a Manhattan printing executive, held the same two series seats at West Side for 30 years.

"They were perfect," Hall said. "I had a great view of the matches going on in the stadium, and the seats overlooked the end, so I could see what was happening on all the other courts."

Hall said he put in his ticket order for Portal 10, Row J, Seats 1 and 2 last March. He has not received his seats yet, and a source close to the ticket situation said yesterday that Hall's seats had been sold to someone else.

"If they send me seats that aren't what I asked for, I don't want any," Hall said.

Besides a lack of tickets (the final four days already are sold out), another sources of agitation to many supporters has been the across-the-board price increase.

A six-seat series box that cost between $750 to $990 last year now is $1,250. Even student prices were raised from $3 to $5 and cut back from the first eight days in 1975 to the first five days this year.

"The boxes were increased because last year didn't take into account the night sessions," Hadley said.

Confusion also continues over the allocation of tickets and the number actually available to the general public.

Talbert said commitments to several local charities had tied up a total of 3,000 tickets this year but that these seats were paid for. He disputed U.S.T.A. claims that 6,500 seats had been set aside for corporations.

"All of these charities, like the Juvenile Diabetes Fund and the Lighthouse for the Blind, have been involved for three or four years," he said. "And we've gotten people to put up the money for these tickets."

The policy shift also has distressed a number of longtime sponsors. The popular Planters Peanut junior clinic, which bused inner-city youngsters to the West Side for the day, will be discontinued; in the past, Talbert had wealthy benefactors purchase the 1,000 tickets for youngsters.

Despite the grumblings, ticket sales "are running well ahead of last year," according to Hadley. And Bob Arrix, executive vice president of Capital Sports Inc., the marketing firm hired by the U.S.T.A. to handle tie-ins, estimated a crease of $300,000 porate sponsorship.

And what of Waneticks, who settle for tickets rounds?

"I'm very disa and many of my fr too," Wanetick said it's a major ever people aren't treate

No Jersey Bar On Dr. Richards

The Women's Tennis Association will not bar its players from participating against Dr. Renee Richards in the Tennis Week Open at South Orange, N.J., Aug. 21 through 29, Jerry Diamond, the executive director of the association, said yesterday.

In a letter mailed to all W. T. A. members, Diamond said the players would be advised that "to the best of our knowledge, a biological male has been admitted to the women's tournament at Orange."

"The players will have the option to play or not to play," Diamond said by phone from San Francisco. "We will not bar or boycott."

Miss Richards, formerly Dr. Richard Raskind, was a nationally ranked men's player. Raskind moved to California, underwent a sex change operation and has since won a women's tournament at La Jolla.

Gene Scott, the director of the South Orange tournament, said that Miss Richards would be admitted to the 32-player women's singles draw.

For that reason Peter Houghton will race at the State Fairgrounds in Syracuse in the afternoon in a New York Sire Stakes program and in the evening at Yonkers.

Windshield Wiper, going from post 7, is the 3-1 second choice to the Stanley Dancer-driven Keystone Ore in the second trial. Keystone Ore, the winner of 10 of 15 races this year, is rated at 5-2.

Dancer explained why he skipped activity for Keystone Ore in last Saturday's Cane Preps at Yonkers. "I couldn't race the colt myself, as I couldn't commute from Vernon Downs [where he finished out of the money with Nevele Thunder in the Gold Cup] in time to handle him. So, I decided the heck with it. I'll train him like I'm racing him."

That's exactly what Dancer did. He trained the son of Bye Bye Byrd in successive heats of 1:58 2/5 and 1:57 4/5, almost unbelievable training miles for a standardbred. Dancer also said his colt was capable of a 1:56 mile over the five-eighths Meadows strip. The stakes and track record for the Adios is 1:57 2/5, posted in

Jets Fall, 41-17, to Raiders

By GERALD ESKENAZI

After returning to Long Island with virtually no time except to change uniforms, the Jets came back to Yankee Stadium last night before a crowd of 10,726 to face the strong, merciless Oakland Raiders.

The Raiders won, 41-17.

The Jets might have picked another team to play for the second time in 48 hours. On Wednesday, they bowed at the refurbished Stadium to the Giants.

"Another team?" asked Garry Puetz, the Jets' guard. "Yes, I would have preferred to play Valparaiso High."

And Valparaiso High in Indiana might not have had trouble with the New Yorkers in the opening-half last night, a half that ended with the Raiders on top by 34-10. The Raiders led before that by 27-0, scoring touchdowns the first four times they had the football.

It was one of the Jets' more disastrous halves—preseason or regular season—since they were founded as the Titans in 1960.

But the Jets fielded a team of free agents and rookies and the Raiders broke them down on the very first sequence, when Ken Stabler, with time enough to count the small house, passed at will and completed almost everything he passed.

Raiders Strike Early

The Raiders always have manhandled the Jets during preseason activity, capturing the five games previously staged. Rarely has an opportunity been handed to them as it was last night, though.

There were, for example, two free agents and a sixth-round draft choice playing the linebacker slots; there was a rookie at quarterback, as Richard ("Call me Richard") Todd replaced Joe Namash, who has a sore right shoulder; there was Buck Baker at tackle, Clark Gaines at running back, Lawrence Pillers at defensive left end.

The Raiders didn't wait to learn these players' names.

Stabler used almost five minutes in moving his club 87 yards to a touchdown. The rookie place-kicker who will replace George Blanda, Fred Steinfort, missed his first extra-point attempt (and first place-kick) when Carl Barzilauskas knocked down the try.

Todd received a hand from the crowd when his name was announced as quarterback. And the crowd murmured appreciatively when he ran for 15 yards on his first series. The club moved down to Oakland's 20, was stalled, and Pat Leahy's field-goal attempt hit the right upright and bounded out.

That left it up to the Jets' defense, and again it was overmatched—there was no pass rush, no pressure on Oakland's receivers, no halting Oakland's runners. So Oakland scored again, with Pete Banaszak taking a Stabler pass, faking Ed Shubert to the ground, and scoring on a 16-yard play.

By the half's end, Mark van Eeghen had run for a 62-yard score and Morris Bradshaw had scored on a

Tom Weiskopf after putting for a par on the second green

By JOHN S. RADOSTA

Special to The New York Times

BETHESDA, Md., Aug. 13—In a motel room near this Washington suburb, a red tabby cat named Claude, who travels 60,000 miles a year, will dine better than usual this weekend. The reason is that Claude is helping his owner celebrate an unaccustomed success. His owner is Dr. Gilmer Bryan Morgan 2d, a sometime optometrist who took a four-stroke lead today in the second round of the Professional Golfers' Association championship.

Morgan, an engaging 29-year-old Oklahoman with a quick smile, followed yesterday's 66 with a fine 68, two under par for the Congressional Country Club. It was an unusually good score considering the difficult set-up of the course, its tiring hills and today's 94-degree heat.

Tom Weiskopf and Tom Kite discovered today that what Congressional giveth it can also taketh away. Weiskopf, who led yesterday with a five-under-par 65, took a nine-shot swing today to 74, four over par. Kite, who shared second place yesterday with Morgan at 66, took a six-stroke swing to 72. The 456-yard sixth hole, where Weiskopf scored an eagle 2 yesterday, got even with him today—it nailed Weiskopf for a double-bogey 6.

When the round was over Gil Morgan stood at 134, six under par and a formidable four shots ahead of Kite's 73—138. Weiskopf was tied at 139 with Gary Player, who won the P.G.A. in 1962 and 1972, and with Don January, the 1967 winner. Player, one of the best sand players on the pro tour, gave an awesome performance, shooting

Reds Beat Mets, On 13 Hits, 7-3

By THOMAS ROGERS

The Cincinnati Reds, who seem to boast slugging at every position in their lineup, let Dave Concepcion lead the way to a 7-3 victory over the Mets last night at Shea Stadium in the opener of a three-game series.

Concepcion, who entered this season with a .253 career batting average, pounded two home runs, a double and a single to pace a 13-hit Cincinnati attack against three Mt pitchers.

He drove in three of th Reds' runs, and George Foster took care of the four others Foster had two singles and his 27th homer of the year. He raised his total of runs batted in to 106, the most in the major leagues.

Also enjoying himself at the plate was Pete Rose, the doughty third baseman, who had gone hitless in 19 times at bat entering the game. He lashed a single to center field in his second apparance. It was single No. 2,000 in the career of the 35-year-old Rose, whose hit total rose to 2,699. Joe Torre robbed Rose of Hit No. 2,700 in the ninth inning, lunging to his right at first base to spear a line drive.

Also contributing to the Mets' woes were Ken Griffy, with three singles, and Tony Perez, with a triple and a single. Joe Morgan, Johnny Bench and Cesar Geronimo did not get a hit, but nothin& more was needed.

The Reds, who are headed for participation in the National League playoffs for the fourth time in five years, extended their lead in to Western Division to 13½ games over the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The Mets, losing for only the third time in 10 games, rapped nine hits off three Cincinnati pitchrs, but left 11 men on base.

They scerode two unearned runs in the fifth inning to take a brief 2-1 lead. Concepcion, who had homered off Mickey Lolich in the third. made an errant flip to second base on a double-play attempt. The error allowed Bruce Boisclair to score from second base. It also permitted John Milner to move to third,

Optimistic Gal Choice At Saratoga

By MICHAEL STRAUSS

SARATOGA SPRINGS, N.Y., Aug. 13—Can Eddie Maple make a winner of Optimistic Gal—again?

An expected turnout of 25,000 will be waiting the answer tomorrow as the Alabama Stakes is run for the 96th time. The Alabama is considered by many horsemen to be the thoroughbred sport's most prestigious event for 3-year-old fillies and Optimistic Gal is the strong favorite.

Optimistic Gal, owned by Mrs. Bertram F. Firestone, was almost unbeatable last year. She began the present campaign impressively and boasted a seven-race winning streak — over a two-year-period—when she captured the Kentucky Oaks at Churchill Downs last April 30.

Suddenly, the 3-year-old daughter of Sir Ivor lost the winning touch. She came home second in her next three appearances—in the

Yanks' Bats Greet Figueroa's Return

By MURRAY CHASS

Special to The New York Times

BLOOMINGTON, Minn., Aug. 13—Some call him Figgy, others call him Figaro, but Ed Figueroa was neither growing fruit nor singing opera tonight. He was finding out if the Yankees' most effective pitching arm was healthy again.

Figueroa, who started against Minnesota, was pitching for the first time since Aug. 3, when he was forced to leave the game after two innings because of a tendonitis problem.

Figueroa's return was eased by the Yankee batters, who kept up their onslaught of Twins' pitching, taking a 7-2 lead after 7⅓ innigs. Graig Nettles had two homers and five runs batted in.

The Yankees were looking for Figueroa's return to good health because he had been their most consistent starter this season, gaining 14 victories against six defeats.

"The Yankees, it is the best trade they made in years," the 27-year-old right-hander said of the winter deal that made him a Yankee. "Right now I am winning 14 games, Mickey Rivers is hitting .300 and Bobby Bonds is in the hospital."

While Bonds's season with California has ended prematurely with a finger operation, Figueroa's proceeds with success. He entered this game with a five-game winning streak and an 8-2 record since June 11.

His return to the starting rotation wasn't hampered by the Yankees' five-run explosion in the first inning. The early uprising was typical of the Yankees' season-long onslaught against the twins. In their first six meetings, five of which New York won, the Yankees scored 50 runs.

This time they battered Eddie Bane from the game before the first inning was over. Bane is a 24-year-old left-hander who, when he signed with the Twins out of Arizona State in 1973, was touted as the next Sandy Koufax.

But Bane has had little success since then and had no more success tonight than

Foreman Fights Today

UTICA, N. Y., Aug. 13 (AP) — George Foreman, the former heavyweight boxing champion, and Scott LeDoux meet tomorrow in a nationally televised fight. Channel 2 in New York will show the bout starting at 4:30 P.M.

Foreman says he is considering the fight a prelude to a title match, and his presence has caused excitement in this city. The Mayor declared "George Foreman Week" in the fighter's honor and gave the former champion a key to the city.

But today Foreman was late for the weigh-in because he was stopped outside his motel and served with a civil summons. The summons stems from an attempt by the law firm of his former attorney, Sargent Shriver, to collect legal fees the firm claims are owed by Foreman.

Foreman weighed in at 220½ pounds, LeDoux at 223.

But the Reds rumbled back with four runs in the sixth. A single by Griffey preceded Foster's 380-foot belt to right, and then Perez tripled before Concepcion's second homer, his ninth of the season.

In the seventh, a hit batsman (Rose), another hit by Griffey and a walk to Morgan set the stage for Foster's two-run single to center, which put the Reds firmly in control.

The Mets managed their final run on three hits in the eighth that chased Jack Billingham, the starter. Vail, Ron Hodges and Roy Staiger ripped consecutive singles with no one out. But Will McSnaney put out the fire. He needed help himself in the ninth from Rawly Eastwick. Torre singled on his final time at bat to extend his hitting streak to 11 games.

Fullerton Is Voted Top Sailing Award

Special to The New York Times

SEA CLIFF, L.I., Aug. 13 —John Fullerton of the Seawanhaka Corinthian Yacht Club was presented the Bell Trophy today for achieving the top percentage performance in Long Island Sound Yacht Racing Association junior competition.

The award was made during the trophy presentations of Junior Race Week, which ended today as it had started last Wednesday with no wind. Fullerton, who was one of three skippers to win both races on Thursday, finished the season with a perfect record in five open regattas. He sails a Laser.

Phil Benson of the host Sea Cliff Yacht Club, the race chairman, postponed the scheduled start for 30 minutes this morning in order that the 187-boat fleet could reach the starting area in Hempstead Harbor. The first two Fireball began racing but were recalled when it became apparent that the winds would die. The regatta was cancelled at 1:10 P.M.

Montefusco Sinks Phils on 6 Hits, 3-0

By AL HARVIN

Leave it to John (The Count) Montefusco to show complete disdain for Friday the 13th and for the powerful Philadelphia Phillies, who are currently far ahead of the pack in the National League East race.

Last night the Phillies did everything but score on the San Francisco Giants' right-hander in the first inning at Veterans Stadium in Philadelphia, but he hung in to pitch a six-hit shutout for a 3-0 victory. It was his fourth straight triumph and his 13th victory of the season against nine loses.

The Giants got to Jim Kaat, the loser, for a run in the first, on Marty Perez's single and Gary Matthew's double. Then the Phils came to bat and threatened to score on The Count.

Dave Cash led off with a sinking liner and ran it into a double. Larry Bowa executed a perfect drag bunt for a single, moving Cash to third. Bowa stole second, putting two men in scoring position with none out.

However, Montefusco proceeded to strike out Mike Schmidt, Greg Luzinski and Jay Johnstone. He finished with nine strikeouts, and at one point he retired 10 batters in a row before Bobby Tolan broke an 0-for-17 slump with a hit off the glove of Darrell Evans at first.

Evans got Montefusco another run in the fifth with a leadoff home run. The Giants scored their final run in the sixth when Matthews walked and scored on Ken Reitz's double.

It was the fourth straight defeat for Kaat and fifth in his last six starts. His won-lost record is 10-8. Montefusco has won six of his last seven.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Cubs 3, Dodgers 2 [1st] [15 Innings]
Dodgers 8, Cubs 7 [2d]

AT CHICAGO—Rick Monday lashed a two-out single to right in the 15th inning of the opener, reached third on Jose Cardenal's single and scored the winning run on Charlie Hough's wild pitch. The victory went to Joe Coleman, who pitched the final 5 1/3 innings. His won-lost record is 3-10. Los Angeles earned a split by rallying for three runs in the seventh and three in the ninth. Bill Russell's two-out, two-run double in the ninth was the decisive hit. Al Downing, the third Dodger pitcher, got his first victory of the season against one defeat.

Expos 6, Padres 0

AT MONTREAL—Steve Rogers, in his third shutout, limited San Diego to six singles, walked one and struck out four as he led the Expos to their fourth straight victory, their longest streak of the year. Ellis Valentine capped a four-run second with a two-run single, and Rogers contributed a run-scoring single in the sixth. It was his fifth victory in 15 decisions.

Cardinals 8, Braves 0

AT ATLANTA—Pete Falcone got plenty of support for his eight-hit pitching and posted his second shutout this season over Atlanta. Hector Cruz provided most of the power with a three-run double in the fifth and a sacrifice fly for another r.b.i. in the seventh. Dick Ruthven shut the Cards out until they got to him with four straight singles in the seven-run fifth.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

White Sox 5, Orioles 2

AT BALTIMORE — Bill Stein singled home a run in the first and touched off a two-run sixth with another single, and Rich Gossage and Dave Hamilton combined to pitch a seven-hitter for Chicago. Gossage 7-11, a shutout victim in each of his two previous starts against Baltimore, had a four-hitter going until he was knocked out of the box by Ken Singleton's run-scoring double in the eighth. Chet Lemon made four sparkling catches of line drives to left-center.

Yankee Bats Ease Return Of Figueroa

he did in his only other starts against the Yankees—both in 1973 when he lost twice in 10 days.

This time he retired Rivers, the leadoff batter, but from that point on he became a victim of Yankee speed and power.

Roy White ignited the explosion with a single, then went to second on Bane's wild pitch with Thurman Munson at bat. Taking note of Munson's .417 average against the Twins this season, Manager Gene Mauch signaled for an intentional walk for the catcher.

But as soon as Lou Piniella came to bat, White and Munson engineered a double steal, giving White 22 stolen bases and Munson 13 for the season. Mauch again could have ordered an intentional walk, but Piniella was hitting only .364 against the Twins, so Bane pitched to him and Lou lined a single to center, driving in White and Munson.

Chris Chambliss, the league's leading run producer who has ripped Minnesota pitching at a .346 pace this year, followed with a ground-rule double. Bane recovered briefly and retired Carlos May on a grounder, but Graig Nettles drove the left-hander's second pitch to him into the right-field stands. The homer was Nettles's 16th—his first since July 23—and gave the Yankees a 5-0 lead.

It also marked the conclusion of Bane's appearance and he disappeared into the dugout as Tom Johnson entered the game and promptly struck out Willie Randolph, ending the inning.

Brye and Braun

Steve Brye tried to get the Twins going in their first inning by getting a single on Figueroa's first pitch, but Steve Braun grounded into a double play on Figueroa's second pitch.

In the second innig, three Twins rapped singles before Figueroa got an out. Lyman Bostock singled off the pitcher's leg and raced to third as Piniella bobbled Butch Wynegar's ground single to right. Then Bostock scored as Mike Cubbage singled to left.

Figueroa retired the next two batters, Roy Smalley on a fly to left and Dan Ford on a called strike, but Bobby Randall singled to center, knocking in Wynegar. Figueroa finally ended the rally by throwing a third strike past Brye.

one birdie and saving three pars from the bunkers.

Jack Nicklaus, who is defending the title, carded a 69 today to stand at 140. Ben Crenshaw and Bob Zender also were at 140.

Congressional played harder today than it did in the first round. There were only seven rounds under par, compared with 11 yesterday. For one thing, pins were placed in difficult spots near bunkers and rough fringes, and the tee markers—minatures of the dome of the Capitol—were moved back. The best round of the day was Dave Hills 66 for 142.

"...no excuse," said the Panamanian after the race.

Recently, LeRoy Jolley, whose stable's tenants include also Honest Pleasure and Foolish Pleasure, decided to drop Baeza. He turned to Maple, the leading rider at the recent Aqueduct meeting.

"We have some pretty good horses facing us tomorrow, such as Glowing Tribute and Javamine, among others," said the Ohio-born Maple today. "I'm hoping she shows some of her old form. If she does, she'll be the one to watch."

Rokeby's Glowing Tribute has been made the second choice in the 1¼-mile contest that has attracted nine starters and will be worth $81,675 if all go to the post. The event is to be held on the main course. The high rating placed on Glowing Tribute is chances is based on a four-straight victories. However, all four were scored on grass.

"I was wondering the same thing," said Patrick Day this afternoon before going out to the track and winning with Cohabitation in the sixth race. "I was up on her the four times she won on grass. I've never had her out on dirt."

Then the jockey from Colorado began looking through the filly's past performances.

"Looka here," he said. "Way back in March, this girl won on dirt—at Hialeah—and by five lengths. That race was the only other one she's won in nine starts this year. "If she could win on dirt then, why not again. I know I'll be expecting the best from her."

Javamine, the Cragwood Stable's daughter of Nijinsky II, was the only other filly the track's oddsmaker rated highly in the field. He made her the 3-to-1 third choice, while quoting Glowing Tribute at 5-1 and Optimistic Gal at 8-5.

11 in Sapling Today

OCEANPORT, N.J., (AP)—A field of 11 is expected for the $100,000 Sapling Stakes tomorrow at Monmouth Park. To the Quick, Judge John Boone, Grey Poupon and Royal Ski are regarded as the leading contenders in the six-furlong race. Other likely starters are P.R. Man, Natural Drive, Bob's Dusty, First Ambassador, Tinsley Hope, Ali Oop and Ahoy Mate.

12-yard pass from David Humm, who had replaced Stabler.

The Jets got lucky on their touchdown, when J.J. Jone's fly-ball pass floated into Lou Piccone's hands in the end zone, 31 yards away. That cut Oakland's edge to 27-7, but Charlie Smith soon retaliated for the Raiders on a 5-yard run.

Leahy ended the first-half scoring with a 32-yard field goal for the Jets. But he missed another field-goal attempt early in the third quarter, when Todd returned.

Stabler was in long enough for only 11 passes, but he completed 9. Todd completed half his 14 first-half attempts for 84 yards.

Todd looked commanding, if erratic. At times he missed wide open receivers.

Todd Turns Punter

He moved the chibe close again only to have Leahy's field-goal attempt fail. Todd got a chance to become a triple-threat late in the their third period when he was asked to punt for the first time as a pro.

At the University of Alabama, he was the short-situation punter when Greg Gantt was there as the long punter. Gantt now is a punter in disfavor with the Jets, and Todd is being asked to compete against him in preseason play.

But Todd's first punt was shanked after a low snap. It traveled forward 4 yards. He had a higher running than punting average.

Toward the end of the period, the Raiders led by 41-10 when Carl Garrett, the ex-Jet, caught a 25-yard pass from Mike Rae.

Burns a Giant Again; Oilers Foes Tonight

By MICHAEL KATZ
Special to The New York Times

PLEASANTVILLE, N.Y., Aug. 13—The Giants left for Houston today and their date with a "buzzsaw."

Danny Buggs and Tim Berra, two injured wide receivers, weren't with them. The yo-yo was.

Bob Burns, the man on a string, joined the Giants today for the second time in three weeks. He will probably be on the field for the opening kickoff tomorrow night against the Oilers in a National Football League preseason game (9 P.M. New York time, Channel 11).

Burns, a running back who played out his option with the Jets last season and then was cut four weeks ago by the expansion team in Tampa, showed up at the Giants' training camp here as a tight end three weeks ago. Two weeks later, he was cut reluctantly by Coach Bill Arnsparger. Now he's back as a wide receiver.

Burns received his second chance with the Giants thanks to his former teammates on the Jets, who knocked Buggs and Berra out of action. Buggs sprained an ankle in the 16-14 victory over the Jets on Wednesday night and will be out "one or two weeks," according to Arnsparger.

Long Rest for Berra

Berra, who will be out several weeks, suffered a shoulder separation on his first play when he gained 18 yards on an end-around in the fourth quarter, a play that was called back because of a clipping penalty. Yogi's son remained in the game and played in pain.

"To come out after one play," he said today, watching practice with his left shoulder in a sling, "would've been ridiculous."

"It is a crazy business," said Burns in his old dormitory room here at Pace University. Just two years ago, Burns was the fullback who ran for 101 yards in the Jets' 26-20 regular-season overtime victory over the Giants.

With his receiver corps down to four able bodies, Arnsparger called Burns yesterday morning. The 6-foot-3-inch, 215-pound player was staying with his in-laws at Oceanside, L. I. He had no idea while watching the Jet game the night before that Arnsparger would be calling, although he told the coach he would be ready if needed.

He spent the week hoping another N.F.L. team would call, thinking that, if worse came to worse, he could register next month at the University of Georgia for the 10 hours of credits he needs for a degree in business administration.

"It's the uncertainty, the not knowing," said Burns. "That's the roughest part, the waiting. Luckily, my wife, Terry, understands."

Burns also understands "the numbers." There are 61 players on the roster and only 43 or so will be allowed to be kept by the N.F.L. Burns would rather play fullback, "but I believe they know who their starting fullback [Larry Csonka] is going to be."

"I think we're walking into a real buzzsaw down there," Arnsparger said. "They've played their first two preseason games on the road and they lost them [9-3 in overtime to Kansas City and 13-10 to New Orleans]."

To make things worse, four Giants who were expected to play a lot at the Astrodome were not feeling well today. They were Doug Kotar, the halfback who will probably be replaced as a starter by Joe Dawkins; Pat Hughes, the weakside linebacker, whose starting spot will probably be taken by Bob Schmit; Steve Crosby, a running back, and Bill Bryant, a defensive back.

U.S. Shoe Companies Are Getting a Foot Back in the Door

The New York Times/Chester Higgins Jr. and John Solo

By BERNADINE MORRIS

The newest fashion explosion is in shoes. Such fashion luminaries as Bill Blass, Calvin Klein, Halston, Ralph Lauren, Diane Von Furstenberg, and Mollie Parnis are now designing for the feet. It's part of a concerted drive by the United States shoe industry to assert itself, after many years of losing business as well as initiative to foreign manufacturing centers such as Italy, Spain, Uruguay, Argentina and Taiwan.

The major reason for the loss was the high price of making shoes in this country, which drove such prestigious concerns as David Evins and Herbert and Beth Levine out of business after many years as design leaders.

A contributing cause was the lack of interest in shoes other than boots, clogs, espadrilles and sneakers on the part of a large segment of the public.

Diversifying Styles

But with an interest in more serious clothes than jeans being expressed, the shoe industry is hopeful that its products will find a more receptive audience.

It's no longer focusing its efforts on one particular style, such as the perfect pump or a specific heel height, as it did in times past. Its new offerings include a wider than usual assortment of comfortable flat-heel shoes under the assumption that today's woman wants to be able to move around easily, plus a downright sexy selection of towering styles for evening.

The new order made its appearance during National Footwear Fashion Week, which drew some 8,000 shoe buyers to New York to view exhibitions of shoes at the Coliseum, and the Plaza, St. Moritz and Barbizon Plaza hotels. The shoe fashions presented are for the next resort, spring and summer season and will begin appearing in stores from October through December.

The trade shows were marked by parties in which Seventh Avenue designers met their new clients, as well as by a lot of supplementary fanfare.

One event was a retrospective showing of the designs of Beth and Herbert Levine at the Costume Institute of the Metropolitan Museum of Art. It covered the period from the time they went into business in 1949 until last year when they closed their manufacturing concern. Now the couple are consultants for Compo Industries, producers of shoemaking machinery.

"We're trying to establish that there is creative design in this country," said Anne Gilliar, president of Shoe Women Executives, which sponsored the exhibition. "There have been so many imports—we want to keep design here."

The sometimes startling innovations displayed on tables, tacked to walls and shown on mannequins, included topless shoes, clear vinyl ones and a variety of boots starting with a white kid high-heel style for evening made in 1953.

Unveiling in a Gym

"I'm all shook up," said Mrs. Levine as she greeted hundreds of well-wishers, including Pauline Trigère, Adele Simpson, the designers, and Geraldine Stutz, president of Henri Bendel.

"When has this ever happened?" she went on. "To a shoe manufacturer and at the Metropolitan?"

Calvin Klein's shoe collection for Andrew Geller was unveiled to a sweating throng in the Parks Department gym adjoining the pool at 59th Street, near 10th Avenue.

"I've always doodled shoes since I was 5 years old," he said, guiding visitors through the display of woven leather flat-heel shoes, mules satin oxfords and sneakers with his name on them.

"Not a lot of styles—just the kind of thing I believe in."

From the municipal gym, the next stop was Halston's boutique on 68th Street and Madison Avenue, where his shoe collection for the Garolini Shoe Corporation was displayed in Plexiglas boxes.

"I love shoes—it's the first chance I've had to design an entire collection," said Halston. His favorite: a pump called "deep throat" which has the same asymmetric V-shaped cutout as his dresses.

"We followed his sketches exactly," said Ann Finkelstein, whose husband owns the shoe company. "We were afraid not to."

Geoffrey Beene's collection, about the most expensive, was shown on gray flannel cloths, as if they were jewels. They will be sold in gray flannel bags and be marked with his initials on the instep.

Day shoes are mostly comfortable, sturdy, classic flats. Evening ones include low and high wedges in satin. Prices are $70 to $100.

Later on, there will be less expensive Beene Bag styles, the designer promised.

Initials on Shoes

Spectator styles are important in the Bill Blass collection for Raybuck, and so are fabrics such as silk shantung, raw silk and denim. Added increment for Blass fans are his initials, face to face, embroidered on the toe or vamp.

Among Ralph Lauren's designs are canvas or leather oxfords derived from men's shoes, high-heel tassel loafers and moccasins. The rugged feeling of his clothes is reflected in his shoes for Saddle Room.

Mollie Parnis has designed "a wardrobe of shoes—the kind I love, from stripping sandals to espadrilles I need in the country," she said. Many of the styles for Miami Footwear are made in Ultrasuède, in colors to match her clothes. The pale kidskins are favored by Morty Sussman, who worked with her on the collection.

Diane Von Furstenberg's shoes for Golo are mostly open sandals, high-heeled or flat, and have her initials stitched on the vamp. But Golo also puts out under its own name an extensive collection of day and evening shoes that, in addition to the low and high heels, often come in a two-inch or middle-heel height.

"We feel strongly about the in-between height because it combines the comfort of flats with the gracefulness of high heels," said Arthur Samuels, president.

The shoe week activities also brought to the fore a talented designer, Reed Jay Evins, 21. The nephew of David Evins presented his new collection for Algy shoes at a fashion show at the Gotham Hotel and succeeded in making footwear look as exciting as dresses or separates.

With Scott Barrie and Ronald Kolodzie, the Seventh Avenue designers, helping out backstage, the show was presented on a runway with canvas panels hiding the models to the hips. All the audience saw were shoes, stockings (sometimes knee socks) and skirts or pants (often bloused and tied at the ankle.

The penny loafers, ballet shoes and stripping sandals with sexy asymmetrical straps had a contemporary charm.

There were whimsical touches such as rhinestone ladders placed under the instep or on the inside of the heel and platform clogs with hinges in the center to provide flexibility.

Along with a compendium of new fashions, the shoe industry has acquired a talented new designer.

What Is It? Anything Your Little Heart Desires

By LISA HAMMEL

In one corner of the East Yard of St. Mark's Church-in-the-Bouwerie, beneath the cool shade of trees and near some old, flat gravestones half buried in the sand, is a strange-looking sculpture.

It is made of very long cedar poles that cross one another asymmetrically, like the preparation for a giant bonfire—except that the poles are bolted together at each point where they cross. Installed in June, it was meant to give the children who spend their hours racing around the old churchyard at Second Avenue and 10th Street something to play on.

And how is this play sculpture used for the two hours a day the gates are unlocked? (The churchyard is presently open only on weekdays from 4 to 6 P.M., when work on reconstruction of the steeple stops.) There is quiet, ruminative play, like digging in the sand beneath the sculpture. There is pretend play, like turning it into a boat or a house. And there is active play, like hanging from a log by your knees, or engaging in a breathtaking game of tag.

"It lends itself to a lot of activities," said Dorothy Greenberg, a teacher at the nearby Liberation Nursery Day Care Center. "They pretend they're in a boat going over water filled with sharks, or that it lies over quicksand, or that they are cowboys riding horses, or astronauts on a rocket. Or sometimes they just sit on it and talk."

"It's been an airplane," said Patty Maccaro, whose 3-year-old daughter, Jessica, often plays there, "or I've seen the kids putting somebody 'in jail' in it, or they pretend it's a broken-down house."

"I love it," said Holly Wolf, a teacher at Rainbow's End Day Care Center. "It's so free-form, it's like something you might just find in the woods and play on."

'Where There's a Child in Trouble There's Usually a Marriage in Troul

"Mommy always buys you all the nice clothes!" Steven shouted angrily at his sister. Pointing his finger directly into Kathy's face, he narrowly missed her nose.

"That's not true," Kathy snapped back. "And I'm not allowed to go out after supper but you are!" Her face was pale with fear as she stood up to her brother, who towered over her.

"Steven is upsetting all of us with his outbursts—and I'm going crazy!" cried their mother, interrupting the argument. Sitting at the edge of her seat, her knuckles white as she gripped the arms of the chair, the woman's sense of helplessness and frustration was apparent.

The members of the Bergson family (the name has been changed) were seated opposite Dr. Donald Block, director of the Nathan Ackerman Institute for Family Counseling. They had come for help because all of them had become emotionally entangled in Steven's outbursts.

"Where there's a child in trouble, there's usually a marriage in trouble," said the clinic's director, Dr. Robert Simon, who supervises family treatment.

"There is a constant struggle for power going on." Dr. Simon said, and the control ricochets back and forth between parent and child, parent and grandparent, husband and wife, sister and brother. It is a nonstop struggle for power.

Steven's parents are one example of the many parents who come to the clinic because they can no longer cope with their children's problems and when they settle down to working with their therapist it is usually discovered that the youngster's problems are stemming from their parents' marital conflicts. The Ackerman Institute techniques are designed to uncover families' combative systems of communicating, teaching them instead to feel and act openly, without fear of retaliation from other family members.

The Worst Time of Life

In Steven's case it was not very long before a therapist, Gillian Walker, could see that Steven's anger was coming from a long-accumulated resentment at being made a messenger in the middle of his parent's arguments.

During his treatment, Steven revealed that of all those times when his parents were either arguing or not speaking to each other, the worst times for him were when they weren't speaking.

Frequent episodes involved Steven relaying, "Daddy, mommy says you . . ." or, "Mommy, daddy told me to tell you . . ." Steven said that often his delivery of a message would bring on a stream of unkind words uttered by each parent about the other.

Miss Walker said her first move was to get the child to refuse to relay messages.

"The child feels a tremendous uplifting when he no longer feels he is responsible for his mother and father's problems," she said.

Steven was taught to say "Daddy, mommy has something to tell you." His parents learned to face each other openly, and as their communications improved, the family grew closer together. Steven's anger gradually subsided until there were no more outbursts.

According to Dr. Simon, many parents unwittingly fan the flames of their children's power struggles by favoring the child who reminds them of themselves and unconsciously rejecting the child who resembles the spouse they are unhappily married to. It is the disfavored child who is constantly wrong or made to give in.

Flatness to Vibrance

When Dr. Block asked Norma M., a writer, her son's name, she answered "Kenny" in a flat voice that hinted of her disappointment in him. But when asked what her daughter's name was, Norma answered "Patricia" with vibrance.

Is it just a coincidence that Patricia has a master's degree while Kenny couldn't get into college? Dr. Simon said the casebooks were filled with histories of flunking children who, made to feel they are a disappointment, wind up fulfilling their parents' negative expectations.

Dr. Simon cited the case of Jimmy, a boy "who had all the makings of a fine young man," who was brought in because he was acting out his emotional distress in the classroom.

"Jimmy's mother had such a relentlessly bad picture of her son that there was no way he could be good—so, Jimmy was being bad," Dr. Simon said.

Troubled About Son

Images and expectations are the roots growing entangled beneath so many family trees. For example, fathers are commonly concerned about projecting that all-knowing, head-of-the-family image and will go to any length to maintain that pose. Phil G. was one such silent-suffering head of the house who came to the institute with his wife, Gloria, complaining that everyone in their family of four was feeling some consequence of their 12-year-old son Michael's homosexuality.

Yet what came out in the first session with Dr. Block's questioning—alternately warm, compassionate and provoking—was that Gloria and Phil were unhappy being married to each other and their at-home atmosphere was charged with undercurrents of smoldering resentments.

Gloria, a cosmopolite, admitted she could no longer stand playing martyr, living in suburbia for the sake of her husband and children when it was the city life that she longed for, and Phil admitted that he felt trapped into always having to make it up to Gloria for her sacrifice.

Making matters worse were all those moves that were supposed to improve family life, but which kept each of the family members from forming any lasting friendships. With no friends and endless cycles of sacrifice, frustration and resentment, everyone in the family was feeling lonely and blaming one another.

Asked why they didn't sit down and air their gripes, the couple said neither of them wanted to burden the children with their marital problems. And Phil said he felt particularly pained by his need to go on acting like head of the family, even while he was worrying about losing his wife.

One of the most effective of a variety of tools used at the Ackerman Institute to help the families recognize their problems is videotape. It seemed to work wonders for Dave and Mary H. who came in waving a surrender flag after four children and 30 years of marital battle. The couple said they came to the institute in desperation because Mary's deep and prolonged depressions were getting to the children.

During the playback of a family session it was discovered that each time Mary spoke, her husband would turn his back on her. When he would answer, it would often be in a low, contemptuous growl. Watching the playback, Dave was dismayed; but once he got over his shock, he could see ho contributing to Mary's built-i demnation.

Dave even admitted that he not being able to express wa openly.

The 'Spine and Ribs'

"Talking is the spine and rib ly therapy," Dr. Simon said. scared feelings are let out, p it much easier to reach out other.

The Ackerman Institute, a 78th Street, sets its fees on scale that ranges from nothin per session, according to inc fee, paid at each session, is amount regardless of how ma members are in treatment (the sessions usually include mothe ther, grandparents and all childr

The sessions are scheduled o ly basis. Earlene Williams, an trator of the institute said the time a family remains in t naturally depended upon the co of the problem, "but the family therapist work very hard t deciding at their first session w the family members want to ch change.

But most important, Miss emphasized is whether there's in the family who is symptomat is always the first focus.

"You really want to take f off that child," she explained.

Reagan's Shift to Left

Schweiker Choice Called Reaffirmation Of Need for a Coalition Inside the G.O.P.

By JOHN NORDHEIMER
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13—Everyone used to know why Ronald Reagan sought the Presidency.

At least, he constantly offered the public a motive:

News Analysis

"My own efforts are devoted to seeing if we can't bring about what I call the New Second Party, which is the Republican Party; but making it unequivocally clear that it represents something, what exactly it stands for, and that we will do nothing to compromise these principles."

This Sunday, the former Governor of California will go to Kansas City, Mo., to cap his challenge to President Ford after nearly nine months of political infighting that grew harsh and divisive at times, making a faint echo of the challenger's opening assertion that he would keep the 11th Commandment: "Thou shall not speak ill of a fellow Republican."

Along the twisting road to Kansas City, the challenger found less to admire in the conservative politics of Mr. Ford, a true believer, than he did in the latter-day conversion of an apostate who had disagreed with him on almost every tenet of the old-time religion.

The preconvention selection by Mr. Reagan of Senator Richard S. Schweiker of Pennsylvania, a liberal, has had the effect of ending all talk about the unfolding of a Republican banner of what Mr. Reagan once called such "bold colors—no pastels" that would leave no confusion about what Republicanism stood for or against.

Instead, the choice has had the opposite effect. It has formalized what the Reagan camp has now acknowledged is the need for a conservative-liberal coalition inside the party, and has reaffirmed on the heels of Jimmy Carter's success with the Democrats the notion that ambiguity on the issues may be a straighter course to victory in American politics today than purity of principle.

Previous Policy Shifts

It was not the first time that the former screen actor had radically backtracked on positions, as witness his conversion to hard-core conservatism after spending most of his adult life as a New Deal Democrat and Hollywood labor leader, and his frequent reversals on policy decisions in two terms as Governor of California in which, despite his national image as an ideologue, he was seen by close observers as a pragmatic compromiser.

As a spokesman for the right wing of the Republican Party across the country on the dinner circuit, however, he was marvelously consistent, and to conservatives he looked like an unyielding rock when contrasted with what many saw as a vacillation of the Ford Administration on such matters as aid to New York City and the construction picketing bill.

If the party realignment concept is dead until some more secure election, why is it that Ronald Reagan runs so hard for the Presidency at age 65, a time when most men of his years and wealth withdraw peaceably to the serenity of at least partial retirement?

The answer is difficult to arrive at. There is at least some suspicion that the challenger himself has not fully worked out an explanation.

Mr. Reagan has robust health: he looks younger and is more active than many men his age. But he is no superman, and he does not relish long and exhausting hours of work. The office of President, the most demanding job on earth, seems to get tougher every year, and it resists the delegation of authority to subordinates that was the style of the Reagan administration in California.

Those who profess to know Mr. Reagan and do not especially admire what they see offer some explanations, perhaps simplistic, for what makes him run.

They see him in his early years as a poor boy who got the breaks on the basis of a winning personality and an ability to please: and they say that when he became the property of a Hollywood studio he found security in a system in which he was the star attraction in public but was backed behind the scenes by numerous strong-willed men and women who made the important decisions for him: his agent, the studio bosses, the producer, the director, the publicity people.

Similarly, this theory goes, he is surrounded today by an array of strong-willed men and women who play some of the supporting roles in the context of a political campaign that is not unlike a movie production: a lot of planning, research and rehearsing are done, a lot of time and money spent, before the candidate's one crucial moment in front of the public.

The decision to choose Senator Schweiker, despite its secrecy, placed the process on unusual public display. It is common knowledge—not disputed by the Reagan forces—that the Senator was the choice of John P. Sears, the Reagan campaign director. The Pennsylvanian was more or less offered the Vice-Presidential role even before he met with Mr. Reagan, who went into the meeting wary of his liberal credentials and accepted him after five hours of persuasion.

Mr. Reagan's admirers saw in the sequence a great flexibility and a capacity to make a tough decision. His detractors found evidence of weakness and dependence.

But there are few indications that the candidate's choice of a Northern liberal as a running mate will divert him from his basic objective in running for President: to overhaul the Federal Government and to end, as he sees it, Washington's interference in matters that should be left to the states or local government, or those things that should not fall within the province of any government at all.

Forecasts an Impasse

Mr. Reagan has already prepared the voters for a stormy administration if he is elected, predicting that an impasse would develop between a Reagan administration and the Democratic majority in Congress.

If that happens, he says, he would bypass the legislative branch and appeal directly to the American public to put pressure on their Congressmen to give him the reform he wants to make the Federal Government smaller and more responsive, in addition to doing away with, or transferring to the states, welfare and other mandated social action programs that he believes are failures or could be operated better locally.

In the White House, he could be expected to function much as he did in the California Governor's chair—as the chairman of the board, delegating authority extensively to Cabinet heads and key aides, and summoning "task forces" from the private sector to study new approaches to government.

His View of World

In foreign affairs, it is difficult to judge what course he might follow. On the basis of campaign statements alone, one might expect him to try to win the respect of both the Soviet Union and China—in addition to the rest of the world—by facing down the Communists at every critical turn of confrontation. His view of the world generally has been that the Soviet Union will continue to expand its system in the absence of American resistance, and that Peking is a temporary ally only as long as it feels threatened by Moscow.

The entire Communist system, in the Reagan view, is an implacable enemy that hopes eventually to destroy the capitalist nations. America thus cannot afford to slip behind the Soviet Union in weaponry, and although Mr. Reagan, as a candidate, has indicated that some fat can be trimmed from the Pentagon budget, it is likely that he would support proposals for the development of new weapons systems.

As to the economy, he has taken the position that inflation is a great threat to the nation's stability and that large Government-sponsored programs to reduce unemployment would introduce a new round of inflationary trends. He favors the deregulation of the energy producers, and has expressed the view that the Government "should get off the industry's back" and turn the producers loose in a free marketplace to develop new sources of oil and natural gas.

Reagan Outspending Ford

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (UPI)—Ronald Reagan spent more on his campaign for the Republican Presidential nomination last month than President Ford and raised more than twice as much money, the Federal Election Commission said today.

Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee, topped both Republicans in both categories.

The July campaign finance reports showed Mr. Reagan spending $1,273,710 as against Mr. Ford's $950,028. The Californian listed contributions and other income of $2,423,500 as against the President's $1,033,197.

For the year, Mr. Reagan has spent almost $14.5 million to Mr. Ford's $11.8 million and has more than $1.9 million on hand going into the convention, as against Mr. Ford's total of about $702,500.

The spending limit for the primaries and state conventions is about $12 million, but not all the expenditures count.

The Reagan campaign lists debts of $51,000, but more than $40,000 is owed to it. The Ford campaign has a debt of slightly more than $63,500 and no money owed to it.

Mr. Carter listed July expenses of $2,227,415 and contributions and other income of more than $2.5 million. For the year, he has spent more than $11.1 million and raised about $9.3 million.

the document next Tuesday night.

Under the proposed convention rules, the support of at least 25 percent of the 106-member Platform Committee would be required to take a minority report to the floor. But the final convention rules will not be adopted until Tuesday, just before the platform is considered.

Early this afternoon, before the committee had voted on the Panamal Canal issue and before the document was completed, John P. Sears, Mr. Reagan's chief strategist, said he was "very satisfied with what's in there."

Mr. Sears added, however, that the Reagan forces would be "reviewing the platform in its entirety."

Before adjourning, the committee reversed itself and toned down a plank, tentatively approved last night, that proposed consideration of ending Federal aid to education with the possibility that the states could pick up the lost revenue by taking over the Federal excise tax on tobacco.

The committee suggested instead tonight that the funding of school aid be studied, and all reference to the tobacco tax was dropped after scornful references by Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, the Senate minority leader, and others.

Senator Scott, warning that the original plank would hurt Republican candidates this fall, suggested such slogans as, "Smoking Your Way Through High School" and "Buy a Weed So Your Kid Can Read."

Reflecting concern that critics might accuse the Republicans of proposing too many tax credits, the committee also adopted a last-minute statement saying that any revenue losses from suggested changes in the tax laws should be offset by cuts in Federal spending.

Ford delegates, who had been jubilant last night over the endorsement of the equal rights amendment, were also pleased with the retention of the Panama Canal plank, which, they said, was acceptable to the President.

The plank noted that the existing 1903 treaty with Panama gives the United States rights in the Canal Zone as "if it were the sovereign" and declared that any negotiations for a new treaty should not cede any rights or power "necessary for the protection and security of the United States and the entire Western Hemisphere."

"Ford can run with this," said Representative David C. Treen of Louisiana in urging committee support of the plank.

In advocating stronger language on the retention of "sovereignty," Beatrice Strong, a Reagan delegate from Arizona, said at one point, "The Panama Canal is as much a part of the United States as apple pie, or Alaska."

Mr. Reagan was opposed to any "giveaway" of the canal in his primary campaigns, but, in offering platform suggestions by Mailgram to the committee last week, he did not mention the issue.

Taiwan Commitment

On other foreign policy issues, the Ford delegates agreed to accept wording from Reagan delegates adding to a general plank supporting Taiwan a commitment to retain the mutual defense treaty with Taiwan.

With only minor opposition, the committee approved another plank calling for American foreign policy with the Soviet Union to be based on "a realistic assessment of the Communist challenge in the world."

Another plank that was approved called for "a superior national defense" and a modernized strategic missile and bomber force, the development of a new intercontinental ballistic missile, a new missile-launching submarine force and the B-1 strategic bomber.

Running through the domestic part of the platform was the theme that the Federal Government should be less involved in the affairs of Americans and that there should be more prudent Federal spending.

Other Domestic Planks

Reversing a subcommittee's recommendation, the platform committee voted last night, 51 to 47, to endorse the equal rights amendment—a plank that has been in the Republican platform since 1940.

At the same time, the committee endorsed efforts to enact constitutional amendments "to restore protection of the right to life for unborn children," to bar the assignment of students to schools on the basis of race, and to permit localities to conduct nonsectarian prayers in their schools.

than $1,000 from him by threatening to expose their affair.

Her disclosures involving Mr. Hays led to his being forced by his colleagues to resign his chairmanships of two of the four committees through which he had exerted enormous power on Capitol Hill.

However, Mr. Hays was renominated for re-election by Democrats in the 18th Congressional District in Ohio last June, defeating his only opponent by 25,000 votes out of 66,000 cast. The district's nine Democratic county chairman will meet Monday to choose a replacement candidate.

This last week Mr. Hays solicited the advice of some of his fellow Representatives as to whether he should run for re-election. He was advised by at least one colleague not to do so because he would be "an embarrassment" to other members and would be a "dead duck" if he hoped to regain his old positions of power.

Mr. Hays was in seclusion at his farm in Steubenville, Ohio, and staff aides at his district office there said he had declined to either elaborate on his resignation statement or to be interviewed.

Mr. Hays, who has been suffering from diverticulitis, a painful stomach disorder, took an overdose of sleeping pills two months ago and went into a coma. He was hospitalized for eight days. The effects of the drug were apparently compounded by mental exhaustion, and a lack of sleep and food.

Immediately before and after his hospitalization, Mr. Hays was forced by pressure from the House Democratic leadership, notably Representative Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., of Massachusetts, the majority leader, to resign his two most powerful chairmanships.

These were chairman of the House Administration Committee, where Miss Ray was on the payroll, and the Democratic National Congressional Committee. The former oversees House operations and the jobs of 5,000 Capitol Hill workers while the latter collects and distributes hundreds of thousands of dollars in campaign contributions to Democratic candidates for the House.

Mr. Hays still retains his chairmanship of the Congressional Joint Printing Committee, which handles millions of dollars in Government printing contracts, although he was due to cede the position in January to a Senator as is the Congressional custom.

He is also the chairman of the Subcommittee on International Relations of the House International Relations Committee. He fended off a challenge to this chairmanship last week. Representative Michael J. Harrington of Massachusetts, who had asked for Mr. Hays's ouster, was the only committee Democrat to vote against him.

Mr. Hays, who maintained two months ago that he was guilty "of nothing more than a little foolishness," is facing major legal difficulties despite his retirement announcement.

He is under investigaton by the Justice Department for possible payroll padding, and he is the target of an inquiry by the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct for the same reasons.

An examination of the records of the House Administration Committee has also uncovered evidence that Mr. Hays hired as a consultant to the committee a former Representative from Montana, Arnold Olsen, and paid him $1,250 a month for three months while Mr. Olsen was serving as a state judge.

Associated Press

Wayne L. Hays

Sued in Columbus

Mr. Hays also has been sued by a Columbus, Ohio, lawyer, Anthony D. Cennamo, who alleges that Mr. Hays violated provisions of the Federal False Claims Act. Earlier this week subpoenas were served on the clerk of the House for records of Mr. Hays's expenses on his numerous foreign trips. The subpoenas call for the records to be turned over to the Federal District Court here.

The suit seeks to recover "on behalf of the United States" Federal funds paid to Miss Ray and two aides Mr. Hays employed in his Ohio office, Frank Vannelle and Donald Gosney.

The suit also charges "unjust enrichment" of Miss Ray and Dell Books as a result of the publication of what is purported to be a semiautobiographical novel by her titled "The Washington Fringe Benefit."

Miss Ray was hired several years ago by former Representative Gray to work as a receptionist.

As Mr. Hay's political fortunes have ebbed, Miss Ray has become a public figure. She has made numerous appearances on television, and next week is scheduled to cover the Republican National Convention in Kansas City for Genesis magazine.

In a reference to Miss Ray, Mr. Hays told The Associated Press yesterday, "The polls show I'd win, but I don't want to give that woman another chance to make an appearance."

Bridge: One Deal in Springold Match Brought Bad and Good News

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

Bad news and good news awaited South on the diagramed deal from the Springold team championship in Salt Lake City last week. He had opened one diamond, and was eventually propelled by his enthusiastic partner into six diamonds after West made a light take-out double and East bid clubs.

A beginner would simply draw trumps and finesse in hearts playing East for the jack. But West's take-out double suggested that this would fail, so South looked for an alternative.

Seeing a chance for an elimination play, he won the opening spade lead in his hand and ruffed another club. drew trumps ending in his hand a ruffed another club. After two more spade leads and a ruff of the last club the lead was in the dummy in this position:

Now South worked things out carefully. The distribution was clear, for if East had begun with only a four-card club suit he would have had a four-card heart suit to bid. Therefore, West held four hearts, which certainly included the ace. The question was the location of the jack. Setting aside the ace, each defender held three hearts. In view o fthe take-out double, the declarer placed West with the heart jack, and made an expert play by leading a heart to his king.

If West had indeed held both missing heart honors, he would have been end-played after taking the ace. But as it was he won and returned a heart. South played low from dummy and got the bad news when East produced the jack.

He got the good news some time later: in the replay the opposing team reached the same slam contract and played it in exactly the same way. No swing.

ment generally supportive of Mr. Ford's foreign and domestic policies.

In a vote late last night, the panel backed a plank endorsing the equal rights amendment, 51 to 47, and in another showdown this afternoon, it rejected a plank asserting that the United States holds "sovereign rights" over the Panama Canal, 55 to 43. Both were defeats for the conservative supporters of Mr. Reagan.

Mr. Sears said at a news conference before the vote on the Panama Canal issue, "The platform is coming along extremely well." He said that there was no plan to stage a floor fight over the equal rights amendment, but that a struggle over the canal seemed possible, given Mr. Reagan's strong views on the subject.

'Justice Rule' Battle

Mr. Sears also suggested that it might be possible to avert a floor fight over the so-called "justice rule" advocated by the Ford forces. It would require all delegates bound by state laws to vote in accordance with those laws.

Reagan lawyers testified against the proposal in the Rules Committee earlier this week, and there have been recurrent reports that some pro-Reagan delegates obligated by primary results to vote for Mr. Ford would abstain. But Mr. Sears said the rule "may not be such a bone of contention."

Discussing efforts to find compromise language, Mr. Sears said.

"Although we cannot say at this point that it is satisfactory we have had some movement in the last day or two toward something that we can all live with." That appeared to suggest that the Reagan camp would seek its preliminary show of strength on Mr. Sears's proposal that all candidates be required to state their Vice-Presidential choice before the Presidential roll-call—an attempt to force Mr. Ford's hand and split his supporters.

Loren Smith, general counsel of Citizens for Reagan, said later that the Vice-Presidential proposal would occupy most of the attention of the Reagan leaders in the Rules Committee tomorrow and on the convention floor Tuesday night.

There were the following other political developments here:

¶Peter Roussel, one of Mr. Baker's deputies, said that John Linnell, the Republican state chairman in Maine, had assured him that Mr. Ford had "15 votes solid in the state." Yesterday, Mr. Linnell said that as many as eight of the pro-Ford delegates might abstain unless they were assured that the President would not pick former Gov. John B. Connally of Texas as a running mate. Maine has 20 convention votes.

¶Mr. Sears denied a report in The Pittsburgh Press that Mr. Reagan was preparing to drop Senator Richard S. Schweiker as his running mate. Mr. Sears said, "We are definitely, wholeheartedly and unalterably committed to Senator Schweiker, and nothing whatever is going to change that."

Accelerating His 'All Out' Effort To Broaden His Support Among Blacks

Votes drives are also being planned by several nonpartisan organizations, including the A. Philip Randolph Institute and a coalition of civic and fraternal groups pulled together by the Joint Center for Political Studies.

Mr. Young said that the Carter campaign was also being helped by many volunteers, mostly young, professional, middle-class blacks "who never participated so extensively before because they were never asked or allowed."

Moreover, he said, the Carter Mondale ticket should reap great benefits from the thousands of blacks running for office in a few remaining local primaries and in the November election.

"Blacks are much more sophisticated politically than they were in 1968 or 1972," he said. "There are almost 4,000 blacks holding elected office. So, there will be over 4,000 blacks running for office in November, a lot of black activity at the polls."

Shoring up that potential is the task of Carter workers at present. Black surrogates are holding meetings with black leaders, especially those who had reservations about Mr. Carter in the primaries, and are fanning out across the country seeking to expand the Democratic party's hold on the black electorate.

'A Delicate Stage'

"We are at a most delicate stage of the campaign in dealing with black leaders, that of bridging the structures between the primary and the general election," Mr. Brown said, adding:

"The established black leadership was not with Jimmy during the primaries. Now we have to get them to support us and also assure those who were with us all along that they are not being overlooked."

In the process, Carter's black forces feel that they must guard against a backlash among whites who might believe that too much attention was being paid to blacks. Mr. Young thinks that a white backlash will not occur, because "polls have shown that whites are ready to be rid of the race problem, and they feel a white Southerner can do it, so they're voting for him for that reason."

Black supporters of Mr. Carter also have to deal with a new phenomenon, "the ugly Atlantan," as one non-Georgian termed it. This stems from the belief of some of Mr. Carter's supporters that this city is now the center of black America. They tend to look with disdain upon blacks in other cities, particularly New York and Washington.

At a cocktail party the other night, Walter Young, the Representative's brother, engaged in a debate with Diane H. Cohen, wife of a Washington lawyer. Mr. Young said that blacks in Washington, were "backward, unsophisticated and uncultured."

Mrs. Cohen took strong exception. She said that his attitude was one of the reasons "a lot of us have problems with Mr. Carter and with Atlanta blacks, and if they expect us to vote for Carter, that attitude had better change."

She said that black supporters of Mr. Carter also had the attitude that "they have seen the light by accepting Jimmy Carter, and now they have to get the rest of us nonbelievers and dummies to fall in line."

"I resent that," she said.

Mr. Brown acknowledged that there was such an attitude, but insisted that it was held by only a few persons. Representative Young said that it was a reaction to the attitude "held for years in the North by blacks who look down on us Southerners."

Eugene J. McCarthy listening as Paul Seidman, his New York coordinator, announces plans to get on New York State ballot as an independent Presidential candidate.

McCarthy, in New York Drive, Undisturbed by 'Spoiler' Role

By THOMAS P. RONAN

Former Senator Eugene J. McCarthy opened a drive here yesterday to get on the New York State ballot in November in his campaign for the Presidency as an independent.

He told a news conference at the Overseas Press Club in the Biltmore Hotel that he had already qualified for the ballot in 15 states, had more than enough petition signatures to do so in five to eight more states, and expected to qualify in total of 40 to 45.

In this state he must get the signatures of at least 20,000 voters, including a minimum of 100 from each of 20 of the state's 39 Congressional Districts. Those who voted in this year's primaries cannot sign. He has already obtained the required number in New Jersey and is seeking the 14,093 needed in Connecticut.

The former Senator from Minnesota, who was an unsuccessful candidate for the Democratic nomination for President in 1968, made it clear that he was not disturbed by the possibility of drawing enough votes away from Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee, to assure the election of a Republican.

Aims for Nonvoters

"Our first effort will be to get the votes of the 40 or 50 percent who don't vote," he told a questioner. "Beyond that, if we exercise a spoiler's role in terms of what we are trying to accomplish, spoiling the difference between Carter and Ford would be a very slight burden of conscience. I am quite willing to bear that."

Whether he was a spoiler was "Carter's problem," he said at another point, and he again accused the former Georgia Governor of moving "in whichever direction would help him most" in the primaries.

"In the early primaries he presented himself as the closest thing they could get to Wallace and as he went along he became more liberal," Mr. McCarthy asserted. His reference was to Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama.

He said that he was not surprised when the Democratic Party adopted "a compromise platform." But he added that he did not "know they would find a candidate who could incarnate compromise as fully as Mr. Carter."

"That made it easier for us because we do not have to distinguish between the platform and the candidate," Mr. McCarthy observed. "And we anticipate that the case for a third party will be just as clear, perhaps even clearer, after the Republicans finish their convention."

The Third-Party 'Cycle'

On his own chances, he said in a light vein that a third party "seems to work out every 115 or 120 years" and that the last successful effort occurred in 1860, when the Republicans elected Abraham Lincoln.

"We figure the cycle has just about run and it's time for a third party," he added.

Mr. McCarthy also criticized the Democratic and Republican programs for helping cities as "superficial and stopgap" and presented his own plan. He said that welfare should be financed principally by the Federal Government, that more money from the Federal Highway Fund should be used for public transportation systems and to maintain city streets, and that national standards should be set to stabilize and finance Medicaid.

Urging termination of the Federal revenue-sharing plan, he said, "More particular determinations as to need and allocations should be made by Federal decisions." He also called for a national policy on pensions and said that imposition of individual and corporate income taxes should be preempted by the Federal Government "with provision for refund and allocation to state and local governments."

Carter Terms Staff Disclosures Of G.O.P. Job List a 'Mistake'

By LINDA CHARLTON
Special to The New York Times

PLAINS, Ga., Aug. 13 — Jimmy Carter disavowed today what he described as an "intra-staff memorandum" listing 19 "unsuccessful" Republicans placed in high Government positions by President Ford. He said that its release had been "a serious mistake" by a staff member.

The list had been prepared to substantiate Mr. Carter's charges earlier this week that Mr. Ford was using the Federal regulatory agencies and other Government departments as "dumping grounds" for unsuccessful Republican candidates and the political faithful. Its release coincided almost exactly with the arrival here yesterday of one of those listed, George Bush, the Director of Central Intelligence.

Today Mr. Carter said that "I have not listed anyone" and specifically exempted Mr. Bush.

"I've never discussed at any time the qualifications of George Bush," he said. "As a matter of fact, I happen to think a lot of the qualifications of George Bush. I would not include George Bush among those who were appointed just because of political reasons. So far at least, the commitments he made to Senate investigating committees have been kept."

F.B.I. Director Criticized

Mr. Carter had few kind words, however, for another Ford Administration official, Clarence M. Kelley, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Mr. Kelley's administrative abilities were questioned yesterday by Senator Walter F. Mondale, Mr. Carter's running mate, who was in Plains for Mr. Bush's intelligence briefing.

"I agree with Senator Mondale that he [Mr. Kelley] has not gotten adequate control over the F.B.I.," Mr. Carter said. He added that "obviously there's no way" any one person could have "complete control" over an agency, but said it was a serious error to have "a highly public incident occur after the director gives his word that it won't recur."

Mr. Carter's remarks were made at a news conference with Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California, who said he was "prepared to help in any way he [Mr. Carter] sees fit" with the Carter campaign. Mr. Carter said that he had asked Mr. Brown to help outside California as well as within it, adding that the Governor was "extremely popular, as I found to my disappointment."

His allusion was to Mr. Brown's primary victories in several states. Mr. Carter is scheduled to make a two-or-three day West Coast trip soon.

Brown Praises Carter

Mr. Brown, who ended his overnight stay with a brief tour of Plains with the candidate this morning, said that he was "impressed" by Mr. Carter, too. The Governor, one of Mr. Carter's most persistent rivals, said that he was impressed that "a fellow that came from Plains, Ga., in such a short period of time, contrary to the expectations of a lot of experts, put together a campaign with energy, intelligence and ingenuity and brought together elements of the party that had not been brought together ever before."

Mr. Carter is scheduled to fly to Charleston, W. Va., tomorrow to speak at a Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner.

Carter's Nephew Is Wounded; Prison Aide Disputes Stabbing

VACAVILLE, Calif., Aug. 13 (UP)—A nephew of Jimmy Carter, the Democratic Presidential nominee, was recovering today in the state prison at Vacaville from superficial wounds that one official said might have been self-inflicted.

William Carter Spann, 29 years old, was committed to Vacaville in June to serve two 10-years-to-life terms for armed robbery in San Francisco. His mother is Mr. Carter's sister, Gloria Spann, and his father, William, is a farmer.

Thomas Charleston, a prison information officer, said the wounds, discovered Sunday, were not stab wounds and were "more like scratches." He said he believed Mr. Spann cut himself in an effort to get more attention.

Mr. Spann is kept in an isolation cell and has a two-man escort whenever he is allowed out in the yard to exercise. Therefore, Mr. Charleston said, it was "highly improbable anyone could stab him."

Mr. Spann's version of the incident came in a letter to The Oakland Tribune in which he called himself "Jimmy Carter's black sheep nephew." The prisoner said he was jumped and stabbed twice in the shoulder, but was defended by a friendly inmate.

Last month, Mr. Spann testified in a San Francisco court against his former robbery partner, and he expressed fear that as a result other inmates were out to get him. He said he wants to be transferred to another state, preferably to a Federal prison.

"I did an armed robbery with a gun—I deserve to do some time," he wrote. "I just want to live long enough to experience the world out there."

Mr. Spann, who said he thinks his relation to Mr. Carter also makes him a possible target, added that he had flooded his family with letters, but "they won't even answer."

According to Mr. Spann, his grandmother, Lillian Carter, told him in a telephone conversation two weeks ago that "they couldn't do anything for me now."

Rabbi Is Convicted In Conspiracy Case Of Cashing Checks

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH

Rabbi Elyakim G. Rosenblatt of Queens was convicted yesterday on a Federal conspiracy charge involving $180,000 in checks that had been stolen by an employee of the Postal Service.

According to the indictment, Rabbi Rosenblatt received a 10 percent kickback in return for cashing the checks for Morris D. Brooks, who had stolen them while working in a data center of the Postal Service in Queens.

Mr. Brooks, who pleaded guilty in the case, testified that he had told Rabbi Rosenblatt that he wanted to cash the checks for people who did not want the checks to pass through their own accounts because they were trying to avoid paying income taxes.

The jury found Rabbi Rosenblatt guilty of conspiracy to defraud the Government, a charge that can carry up to five years in prison and a maximum fine of $10,000.

After the trial in Federal District Court in Manhattan, Rabbi Rosenblatt said that the jury had failed to understand the issues in the case and that he would appeal the verdict.

"There was no evidence whatsoever for the conviction," he said, adding that "I am totally innocent."

The rabbi is scheduled to be sentenced on Sept. 24 by Judge Constance Baker Motley, who presided over the four-day trial of the case.

Rallying Round Nation's Culture

By ALDEN WHITMAN

A CULTURAL HISTORY OF THE AMERICAN REVOLUTION: Painting, Music, Literature and the Theater in the Colonies and the United States from the Treaty of Paris to the Inauguration of George Washington, 1763-89. By Kenneth Silverman. 689 pages. Illustrated. Thomas Y. Crowell. $17.50.

When Bishop George Berkeley wrote his celebrated "Verses on the Prospect of Planting Arts and Learning in America"—the date was 1726—he was reflecting the common view when he said "Westward the course of empire takes its way." This view held as an article of faith that "arts, sciences and empire traveled west." It was thus inevitable that the arts, which were supposed to have begun in Greece, picked up by Rome and then moved to England, would be translated to America. However, up to the middle of the 18th century, there was no evidence of any migration, but starting in the 1760's, there was the initial kindling of what could later be discerned as American culture.

To chronicle this development in its first quarter-century is the enormous task Prof. Kenneth Silverman of New York University has undertaken. Impressive in its detail and in the amount of learning, the book is nonetheless more than an encyclopedia or catalogue of esthetic values, but it also ligently on esthetic values, but is also argues a thesis, one that is certain to be debated.

Baldly stated, the thesis is that there was an intimate connection between the politics of the national independence movement and the growth of an American culture. Professor Silverman, of course, elaborates this in sophisticated terms, but his book is organized to demonstrate, insofar as possible, a cause-and-effect relationship. There are three parts, dealing respectively with the years 1763-70, 1770-83 and 1783-89.

Preoccupied With 'Firsts'

Each part opens with a quick look at the arts and then moves to a chronological statement of political events and of the cultural developments that seem to flow from them. One example is the widespread use of verse as a means of political discourse. Another was the use of prints for a similar purpose. The foundation of any culture is the printed word, a point Professor Silverman underscores by noting how rapidly American printers turned to native substitutes for British books and by citing examples of the liveliness of the press, which fed on native contributions.

There were two offshoots from Bishop Berkeley's notion of westward cultural migration. One was a precoccupation with "firsts." An American edition of Cicero's "Cato Major" was hailed by none other than Benjamin Franklin as "the first translation of a classic in this Western World." To this day, there is an American emphasis on the mystical powers of being "first"—first to invent baseball, first to devise the telephone, first to explode an atom bomb.

The other offshoot was cultural nationalism, which tended to place American arts and letters above criticism. This was evident toward the end of the Revolution—in the late 1780's. Recognized at the time, cultural nationalism disturbed some writers, notably David Humphreys, who remarked, "I detet to hear anybody abuse our Country but myself." Along with pride in "firsts," this nationalism has persisted and finds expression today in a belief that our cultural values are exportable more or less intact into the rest of world.

A corollary is resistance to cultural imports, or at any rate a suspicion of them. Happily, this appears to be diminishing, although the market (and the appetite) for Latin American, Canadian and Russian writers (unless they are exiles) remains small.

Professor Silverman's main thesis—that cultural achievements reflected the national consciousness embodied in the Revolution—is tempting, all the more because he expounds it with so many examples. There were so many "firsts," so many efforts to provide what could no longer be imported from Britain, so much sprouting of native talent, that it is easy to point to the obvious cause: the Independence movement. Ardor for independence and the élan generated in achieving it promoted the American culture.

Political Propaganda

But was it really that simple? It may be fairly argued, I think, that in a population of 2.5 million (the number of Americans at the Revolution) native talent was likely to come to the fore in any event. Neither Franklin nor Jefferson, to mention only two, were cultural figures produced by the Revolution. The three greatest American painters—Copley, Stuart and West—spent those years in Europe. Much of what was written was political propaganda in verse form—and very bad verse at that. The theater was not innovative. Music was still drawn from Europe, although increasing numbers of Americans learned to play instruments and to enjoy concerts.

Perhaps Professor Silverman is right, but a more detailed analysis would be very much in order. Indeed, one hopes he is right, for any countervailing thesis would necessarily be obliged to sanction British colonialism as a cultural potting shed. Nonetheless, the force of the Silverman thesis rests, in this book, more on citation compounded than on analysis rigorously pursued. Since the subject is so interesting and provocative, I hope that he will continue to write about it.

Meanwhile, we should be grateful for his labors. "A Cultural History of the American Revolution" is one of the best of the Bicentennial books for the searching light it throws on the beginnings of the arts in this country. Professor Silverman's research is awesome. He appears to have put his finger on every thread that contributed to the pattern. If at the conclusion of the period covered by his book a distinct American culture is visible, the facts underlying it can be found in one place. That is no small feat, so one should "rally round the flag, boys," for Professor Silverman.

A Stoic Pat Nixon Is Recalled by Aide

Special to The New York Times

LONDON, Aug. 13—"The key point is that they never understood Washington, never figured out how to cultivate friends or negotiate with enemies. They simply couldn't reach out, and thus they built a fortress."

In these words, Helen McCain Smith summarized the other day her rather wistful thoughts of what was wrong with the Nixon Presidency and what ultimately led to its collapse.

Helen Smith served as Mrs. Nixon's press secretary in the last agonizing months of the Nixon Presidency. She is now living in relative obscurity as an information officer in the American Embassy here.

But she has found herself back in the news because of an article of which she is co-author in the July issue of Good Housekeeping magazine in order to "set straight the record" on Mrs. Nixon's behavior during the few months that preceded the President's resignation and return to California.

The impression left in Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward's second book, "The Final Days," was that Mrs. Nixon could not cope with the shattering denouement of her husband's tenure—that she took to drink, failed to perform official duties, and came close to divorcing Mr. Nixon.

Mrs. Smith says that none of this is true. Both in the article and in an interview here this week, she concedes that Mrs. Nixon was not aware of the scope of the scandal, preferred to believe that her husband had been misled by "unscrupulous advisers," and did not realize that her family would have to leave the White House until the President gathered them all together on Aug. 2, 1974, in the Lincoln Room and showed them a transcript of a decisively incriminatory tape of discussions in his office.

'A Stocial Figure'

But Mrs. Smith insisted that none of this affected Mrs. Nixon's personal behavior. While she smoked cigarettes and had an occasional drink "off duty," the crisis did not drive Mrs. Nixon to despair, nor did she hide from her ceremonial activities, Mrs. Smith says.

"As the pressure mounted she became even more conscientious than before about fulfilling the backbreaking schedule she set for herself," Mrs. Smith says in her article. She added the other day:

"Pat was answering her mail until the very end. She was a stoical figure when times were good, when the dreariest burden in her life was to attend political rallies day after day. But she was no less courageous when things went bad."

Mrs. Smith says she does not know enough to comment on the "private life" of Mr. and Mrs. Nixon—what they told each other as the scandal deepened. But she clearly feels that the President's wife was never properly recognized or rewarded for her loyalty, in good years and bad, and that while she willingly succumbed to the demands of political life she was often hurt by them.

Mr. Nixon's behavior, she said, was carefully watched by the West Wing of the White House—presided over by H. R. Haldeman, Mr. Nixon's chief of staff, for whom Mrs. Smith has very little affection. In the Good Housekeeping article, Mrs. Smith recalled that rumors circulated throughout the White House that Mr. Haldeman felt that Mrs. Nixon was a "political liability" and that "the President would do well to dump her."

Mrs. Smith said that she never was able to confirm these rumors. But she did say that on occasion Mrs. Nixon and Mr. Haldeman violently disagreed on matters of taste if not politics.

On one occasion, Mrs. Smith says, Mr. Haldeman recommended the taping and marketing of a White House concert by Johnny Cash. Mrs. Nixon thought that the idea was exploitative, and successfully vetoed it. She also successfully complained about the flamboyant uniforms that Mr. Haldeman briefly imposed on the White House guards.

There were other points of difference, according to Mrs. Smith, between the First Lady and "the men in the West Wing" — Mrs. Nixon and staff were consigned to the East Wing, like other Presidential wives. Mrs. Nixon, for example, thought that White House staff members should circulate among ordinary Washingtonians.

"But," says Mrs. Smith, "dinner parties were discouraged. We were not to mix with Democrats, Liberals, or reporters. This was regarded as frivolous activity. People who got too friendly with the opposition soon suffered."

Mrs. Smith's vision of Mrs. Nixon is that of a woman who accepted her role as a political wife but then found that victory did not bring any sense of freedom.

"She loved to dance," Mrs. Smith recalled, "especially with a good dancer like Melvin Laird. But about halfway through the evening the President would go upstairs, as if by some signal notifying his guests that he had work to do tomorrow. She did not like leaving that early. Having worked so hard, she wanted to enjoy herself."

The suspicions of the Haldeman apparatus were compounded, Mrs. Smith says, by Mr. Nixon's own carelessness.

In the Good Housekeeping article, she talks about how Mrs. Nixon, after an exhausting good will mission to Peru, met her husband in Nashville, where Mr. Nixon was attending the opening of the Grand Old Opry. The day was also the occasion of Mrs. Nixon's 61st birthday.

At the end of the concert, Mr. Nixon sat down at the piano and played "Happy Birthday" to Mr. Nixon. Deeply touched, she jumped from her chair on the stage and moved toward him. Preoccupied by the audience, the President strode to center stage—and ignored her outstretched arms.

Mrs. Smith prefers to regard the President's snub as the inadvertent reflex of a political man who was playing the piano not for his wife but for the crowd—and himself.

But what disturbs her most is not the memory of that painful moment but—and this she related the other day—of what happened the next morning in Washington, when Mrs. Nixon failed to show up at a religious service in the White House presided over by Norman Vincent Peale.

Mrs. Nixon had rarely missed a service before, and when her absence was noted Mrs. Smith's telephone started ringing. All of the calls were from Haldeman aides. One caller implied that Mrs. Nixon had had too much to drink the night before, or, at the very least, was absenting herself in order to punish her husband for his snub at Nashville.

The truth of the matter, Mrs. Smith says, is that the first Lady was simply exhausted by her trip in Peru.

"This sort of thing happened a lot," Mrs. Smith says. "She was regarded as an accessory—not by her husband, who I think genuinely appreciated her efforts, even though he did not always acknowledge them, but by his people. I don't think she misses that life. She has always wanted to be back in California. I think she is finally happy there now."

Flood Toll Rises by 2 to 101

LOVELAND, Colo., Aug. 12 (UPI)—Searchers in the Big Thompson canyon found today the bodies of two more victims downed by a July 31 flash flood. The authorities said that the total number of dead found was 101 and nearly two-thirds of those had been identified.

Murders Most Foul

Sam "Momo" Giancana was fixing a late night snack in his kitchen when somebody put seven .22 caliber bullets in him. John Roselli was on his way to play golf when somebody interrupted his journey to asphyxiate him, stuff his chained body into an oil drum and then dump the drum into the bay somewhere off southern Florida.

Messrs. Giancana and Roselli had a great deal in common in addition to being victims of unsolved murders. They were associates in organized crime. They were also associated during the early sixties in an enterprise spawned by the Central Intelligence Agency to murder Fidel Castro. At about the same time, they were also associated with a young woman named Judith Campbell, who in turn was associated with President John F. Kennedy.

Mr. Giancana was murdered a few days before he was scheduled to give testimony to the Church committee, which was investigating intelligence agency abuses. Mr. Roselli testified twice before he was killed. Police authorities responded similarly to both murders. They suggested that each murder had "the earmarks" of a gangland killing. That official diagnosis generally provides people with a satisfactory explanation enabling them to file and forget any murder.

There are at best two things wrong with that attitude. The first is that there is no reason why gangland murders should be exempt from the ordinary processes of the law. A murderer should not enjoy immunity just because his victim spent a lifetime in the rackets. Second, the connections are just too thick for these murders to be dismissed so lightly. Senator Howard Baker was right in perceiving a strong need for further investigation of these crimes.

It is gratifying that Attorney General Edward H. Levi yesterday ordered the F.B.I. to investigate a possible link between John Roselli's murder and his Senate committee testimony. In addition, the Congress is not foreclosed, and jurisdiction would seem clear in a matter that may involve foreign policy, a President's life, intelligence abuses and obstruction of Congressional investigations—in addition to the fact that murders have been committed. Incantation of the familiar words, "gangland-style killing," should block neither people's minds nor further inquiries

Presidential Debates

Ever since the televised debates in the 1960 Presidential campaign between John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon, the viewing public has been denied another chance to see two major party candidates in the give-and-take of joint appearances.

The Kennedy-Nixon series of debates was made possible when Congress suspended the "equal time" provision of Section 315 of the Communications Act, meaning that any other candidates could not demand similar air time under the law. Since then, the rules have been relaxed so that Presidential debates can be covered as bona fide news events if they originate outside the studios and are "sponsored" by such organizations as the League of Women Voters education fund. No Congressional action is now necessary.

An opportunity for such debates is coming up in the next two months before Election Day. The League has announced plans for "'76 Presidential Debates," scheduled for Sept. 25, Oct. 11 and Oct. 25, with a fourth devoted to a debate on Oct. 18 between the two Vice-Presidential candidates. An effort is now in progress to raise public funds to underwrite the cost of these programs at a place or places agreeable to the candidates (which is how Lincoln and Douglas worked it out in various towns during the 1858 Senatorial contest—using only lung power amplified by the printed press).

Two of the three commercial networks have indicated willingness to carry the programs and the third is reserving judgment on the League proposal. The Public Broadcasting Service undoubtedly would carry the programs; many of its stations did so during the League-sponsored Democratic primary debates.

The whole enterprise, however, depends on the readiness of the Presidential candidates to debate each other. Governor Carter's press spokesman indicated willingness; Governor Reagan is on record for debating if he is nominated; but President Ford's press secretary—so far—has stated that the President's views are already fully available to the public, and that he makes policy decisions on the issues every day.

If President Ford himself gives the go-ahead, the televised debates could readily be arranged. They would constitute an important service to the electorate.

Consolation Prize

Melvin N. Lechner, who resigned under fire last January after less-than-distinguished service as the city's budget director, has been awarded a $28,000-a-year contract as consultant for the Fire Department's pension fund and is in line for a similar fee from the Police pension fund.

That is a familiar story around City Hall where patronage appointees who have been eased out of office in a fiscal crisis house-cleaning tend to reappear elsewhere on the public, or quasi-public payroll, sometimes at higher pay. The two consulting contracts could yield Mr. Lechner $56,000, almost $7,000 more than his previous city salary.

Thus do New York City politicians, and their union friends, take care of their own. But who is looking after the interests of the public and public employee pensioners?

Controller Harrison J. Goldin, who alone among fire pension trustees opposed the Lechner contract, has pointed out that an established pension consulting firm is prepared to offer the same services for less than one-quarter of Mr. Lechner's fee. He also has noted that consultation work has become "largely superfluous" because most pension fund money currently is being invested in city bonds.

The underfinanced pension funds, which already cost New York City taxpayers $1.5 billion a year, cannot afford to provide sinecures for former Beame administration officials. The Lechner handout by the Police fund trustees suggests the need for a closer look at how all these funds are being managed.

Air of Indifference

After a four-year study, State Controller Arthur Levitt has issued a report on New York City's air pollution control programs which strongly confirms what environmentally concerned citizens have long contended—that city and state officials show little interest in cleaning up the city's air, especially when it means inconveniencing motorists, who are the worst polluters.

The Levitt report does give the city credit for reducing pollution from stationary sources, largely the achievement of the previous administration. The resulting drop in sulfur dioxide and particulates in the air has substantially increased the number of days in which air quality is listed as "good" or "acceptable" under a municipal rating system.

But the report notes that enforcement of regulations covering potential stationary polluters, such as incinerators and furnaces, is so lax as to invite "a high degree of indifference." And it questions the validity of the ratings, contending that the "acceptable" label that was assigned to 204 days last year actually describes air that, according to Federal standards, is unfit to breathe.

The controller notes, for example, that carbon monoxide levels caused by auto emissions exceeded maximum Federal standards 100 percent of the time at the 59th Street Bridge and 88 percent of the time at 45th Street and Lexington Avenue. He further observes that the city still has not fulfilled plans to establish a monitoring network capable of giving an accurate and city-wide picture of pollution.

Despite "wide agreement that air pollution presents both a public health hazard and levies a substantial economic toll on society," the study found little evidence that either city or state are making serious moves to reduce motor vehicle traffic. Of 12 strategies toward that goal, devised locally and approved by the Federal Government three years ago, only two have been fully complied with, four were still under study and six were being ignored.

In fact, the Beame administration has engaged in a determined campaign of stalling and court action to avoid Federal imposition of such regulations as banning taxi cruising, limiting the hours of truck deliveries and tolling East and Harlem River bridges. With each delay, the congestion and pollution grow worse at an inordinate cost to the economic life of the city and the health of its citizens.

Red Reformation?

Santiago Carrillo, leader of the Spanish Communist Party, recently compared the situation in world Communism to that in Christianity at the time of the Protestant Reformation. In the past, he argued, he and his fellow Communists "had our Pope, our Vatican" in Moscow; but now he sees himself and other dissident Western European Communists as a sort of collective Martin Luther demanding radical change.

The analogy is hardly new, of course, and Western observers of Communism have long considered that creed a "secular religion" in which Marx, Engels and Lenin play ideological roles corresponding to those of the deity in other faiths. What is startling in Mr. Carrillo's rhetoric is that he, a Communist leader, uses the religious images and comparisons that formerly were confined to the critics of Communism.

But even Mr. Carrillo's heresies pale before those of the Japanese Communist Party, whose rise in electoral and other support in recent years testifies to the political utility of its modernizing and reformist trend. Two years ago the Japanese Communist leadership removed from its approved reading list more than 20 classics of Marxism-Leninism including such hoary treasures as "The Communist Manifesto" by Marx and Engels, and Lenin's "State and Revolution." The reason given was the need to discourage "dogmatic obedience" among Japanese Communists.

At the party's scheduled Congress later this summer, it is planned to drop advocacy of the "dictatorship of the proletariat" as well as to remove the term "Marxism-Leninism" from the party constitution. Last March, in a public communiqué, the Japanese and Spanish Communist Parties agreed that in a future Socialist society "the state will not be allowed to lay down a particular ideology as a state ideology or the only 'authorized philosophy,' or to force the people to accept such an ideology." The communiqué also backed a pluralistic political system in which governments would change as the result of elections, while also endorsing such other values as respect for human rights, trade-union independence and the right to strike.

If one takes their public statements seriously, then the Japanese and Spanish Communists have very little in common with Soviet and Chinese Communists. If Mr. Carrillo and other "scientific socialists"—as these Communists now like to call themselves—really depart as far as they claim from the Soviet and the Chinese models, it would be more honest for them to drop the Moscow connection altogether. Otherwise cynical observers may suspect the way is being left open for some future counterreformation, in which ideological baggage now being ostentatiously dropped might be restored to favor—with the Communists in power.

Securities Markets and Computers

To the Editor:

In your recent editorial, "Competing for Shares," you suggest that "tangible benefits of cost and efficiency" could accrue to securities customers by replacing stock exchange specialists and floor brokers with a computer. As a data-processing technician who has spent a considerable amount of time studying this question, I must take issue with the view that a computer can perform all the functions and activities of the present professional participants.

A computer, while working at incredible speed, can only respond to the instructions of its programmers and it cannot take even the simplest step without these precise directions. Consequently it can apply no test of reasonableness unless that test has been previously specified and programmed.

For a computer to do the kind of job you contemplate the programmers would have to identify every conceivable alternative and permutation that might confront it and develop a fixed set of instructions for dealing with each of them. Thus, in the automated trading environment suggested by your editorial, it would be necessary to analyze and build instructions not only for thousands of different routine situations, but also for such unusual developments as major national news, special actions by individual companies, major imbalances of buying and selling interests, communications breakdowns, etc. In today's markets, all of these situations are addressed by the collective judgment of the professional participants.

Important improvements can and should be made in the securities industry's ability to handle and communicate trading information, but great care must also be taken not to dismiss the entire complement of those whose skills and judgment continue to be among the key elements of the existing market centers.

The data-processing industry has been justifiably criticized in the past for being too ambitious in applying its systems expertise to non-routine tasks. In many of these cases, after great expense no significant cost savings were realized and the quality of service was not improved. It seems curious that when it comes to contemplating a securities market data-processing system that would be one of the most complex and expensive installations anywhere, it is not the policymakers who are—to use your term—"skittish," but the data-processing people who have carefully studied and analyzed the problem.

'Abused' Land Owners

To the Editor:

How kind of you to mention, in "Kill That Dam!" [editorial Aug. 21], the victims of this memorable blunder, the paralyzed residents. But you don't know the half of it.

In July 1974, after three years of appraisals by the Corps of Engineers, my land was condemned. Before the filing of the documents, the Corps reneged, although they had both the funds and the authority to consumate the transaction on "moral obligation" grounds. Since then, neighboring homes have been moved or demolished and the remaining wreckage is a haven for drifters and misfits. Surviving residents are exposed to increased incidents of arson, looting and vandalism.

We cannot sell our land; we cannot develop it; we cannot move. Some are further burdened by taxes on replacement homesites, bought in anticipation of the inevitable move. We are the prisoners of Congress, enemies of our Government, whose lives have been just as effectively, if not as brutally, disrupted as those highly visible Asians for whom our politicians bleed so profusely. We are truly second-class citizens, abused by the brutal and arrogant Corps of Engineers and ignored by Congress.

I did not know that my Government had been given the right to destroy the value of my property and disrupt my life indefinitely because of a change in plans. I've waited half my life under the shadow of this accursed project. How much longer, Government of the People, by the People and for the People?

Ford for Vice President

To the Editor:

As a Democrat who would like to see the Presidential campaign battle made less confusing for the voters and be based on more real social, economic and political issues, I would, respectfully, like to make a suggestion to Governor Reagan in the event he is nominated for the Presidency by the Republican convention, and in the event of an open convention, to its delegates.

Instead of Senator Schweiker, Reagan should nominate to the convention as his candidate for Vice President (or the delegates can vote for) a person who has some experience in the Vice Presidency and the Presidency, Gerald R. Ford. The people then could make their choice on the basis of a fairly consistent record in the State House, the Congress and the Presidency, in addition to whatever new issues might be developed during the campaign.

Devoted as he says he is to democracy and the public good, I imagine President Ford would be humble enough to accept the nomination.

'Dangers' in Fighting Corruption

To the Editor:

Your Aug. 4 editorial "Public Trust" is a timely criticism of wrongdoing in high office. But your call for "quick" action by the House on financial disclosure legislation, and your comment that the Senate's "Watergate" reform bill (S.495) differs only in detail from the House bills, overlooks grave dangers in both approaches.

The evil of corrupt public officials will not be overcome by compelling 35,000 to 100,000 career Federal employees to expose their families, selves and homes to potential burglars, and kidnappers, who would have lawful access to the facts about employee family assets. The legislation you urge would put our property on the public record whether or not its source or ownership has any rational nexus with our job. There is no basis for the inference of a connection between preventing public officials from acting improperly and the opening of senior employees' private records to public scrutiny sufficient to outlaw our children from the streets and make fortresses of our homes.

President Ford has suggested that disclosure be limited to elected and high-ranking policy officials; but he would exempt those in the competitive service. His suggestion deserves consideration in order to attract and retain a talented civil service.

Who will protect our children and our homes? As to material aspects alone insurance is of little comfort: Insurers frequently cancel the policies even of suburban burglary victims.

Nor are current disclosure rules for executive branch personnel operative only when, as you suggest in the case of members of Congress, a congressional committee is pressured to investigate. There has long been a financial disclosure requirement in the Executive Branch intended to provide anonymity short of prosecution.

If any legislation is to be enacted, Congress should adopt S. 495, which excludes from the requirement for disclosure so much of otherwise reportable assets and transactions which are the sole property of other family members and which were not derived through the reporting employee. The Senate's exclusion of household furnishings, automobiles, etc., avoids unnecessary public exposure.

Reports should be exposed only to those who adequately evidence their identity. The Federal employee whose report is examined should be promptly informed.

Legislation calling for cataloguing all or substantial assets would expose us to the peril of some mistake thereby inviting perjury charges for having undervalued or overlooked an asset or two or more.

A Trip to Hyde Park in the Summer of '36

By Page H. Wilson

WASHINGTON — In the summer of 1936, when I was living with my family in the country near Baltimore, I was invited to visit Hyde Park, N.Y. for a few days. Three or four of us, all in our late teens, had been asked for a long weekend. We were mainly friends of John Roosevelt—a freshman (or sophomore) at Harvard—but the occasion was to celebrate young Franklin's 21st birthday.

I broached the idea of visiting the Roosevelt family gingerly with my parents because if my father wasn't a rabid Republican he at least frothed at the mouth at the mention of F.D.R. If anything, Roosevelt was even lower in my father's esteem than Al Smith had been in 1928, and to prove my inherited distaste for him I had wrested a Smith button off of a schoolmate and cast it in the fish pond. Indeed, during that summer holiday I was working as a volunteer in the campaign to put Alfred Landon in the White House. There had been a smug picture of me in The Baltimore Sun, wearing a Landon button, holding a big paper sunflower, the state flower of Kansas and symbol of the Landon campaign.

"Damn it," my father said to me, his headstrong daughter, "if we let you go to Hyde Park you'll come back home a damned Democrat. I know it. You'll come back a Democrat." I pooh-poohed such an absurd notion and kissed him on the cheek.

At the appointed time our group set off in a friend's car and arrived at the Roosevelt home in the late afternoon. As we turned into the driveway we saw a solitary soldier standing in front of a small shelter that reminded me of the little guardhouse in my brother's collection of tin soldiers. That was the only evidence of security that I saw all weekend.

We were greeted by John and introduced to his mother and to his grandmother. We unpacked and some of us went riding. We trotted through woodlands stretching nearly down to the river, circled around and came back past the casual, single guard.

I was sharing a bedroom with another guest. After we had showered and made up our faces, we checked out each other's appearance. I surveyed my friend, centered the belt to her dress and told her she looked nifty. An older sister didn't know it but I had borrowed a dress of hers; it was pleated black chiffon with an elastic ruffle around the shoulders. When I'd tried it on at home I figured it made me look at least a couple of years older, which clinched my decision to take it. This evening I looked at myself in the mirror and turned around to my friend. "Demure?" I asked her, with the shoulders covered. "Or dashing?" I asked, pulling the dress down to about the level of the smallpox vaccination high on my arm. She nodded assent to the latter.

We gathered in the living room: Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Mrs. James Roosevelt, Jimmy, Franklin, John, the weekend visitors and a few people from neighboring houses. I reckoned my dress was working all right when Jimmy offered to make me a martini. He did and I was about to take the first sip when the President came in. He greeted his guests, with special attention to the young ones. When it came my turn he looked at my drink, said it was unfit for human consumption, and fixed me a dark-colored Old Fashioned instead.

At dinner I was seated on the President's left. One of the local guests was on his right. I think her name was Laura Delano. In any event she was a cousin of the President's and they chatted together about this and that in the easy fashion of people long fond of each other; I recall at one point overhearing a discussion about some kind of dog she was breeding.

After a while the President turned to me. My maiden name had been Huidekoper and there had been a running acquaintance between our families — both Dutch. He asked me about a relative of mine who raised cattle on a ranch in Wyoming and I told him the latest news I had. Then he asked me what I did to keep myself busy. I turned to him slowly and deliberately and told him I was working in the Landon campaign. Not exactly making policy, I explained, but stuffing envelopes, passing out buttons and literature and such things.

The President threw back his head and roared with laughter. Then he told me two stories about my candidate. He said he had tried to talk to Landon about foreign relations, but Landon thought he was referring to cousins landing on Ellis Island. He said he tried again. This time he told Landon he wanted to talk to him about the international situation and Landon thought the subject was the drop in value of International Harvester stock on Wall Street.

I don't know where we went from there, and I have tried often since to retrace the trail of conversation that led us that evening into a discussion of Rudyard Kipling. I only remember that we pounced on the point that Kipling was one of the great storytellers of all time. We talked about several Kipling stories, including "The Light That Failed." Then the President said he had one favorite Kipling tale which he had long felt would make a great movie and which he would someday direct. I asked him which one it was. He said it was an obscure story, one I surely had never heard of.

I challenged him. He said it was a story called "The Brushwood Boy." It's one of my very favorite stories too, I said. At once we set about casting the movie of "The Brushwood Boy," arguing back and forth who would play the girl and who the boy. At some point we tried to remember the names of the two characters but neither of us could. We were perplexed that although we each knew the story so well—we had talked about how one would direct the scene of the boy and the girl meeting in their childhood and the scenes of the recurring dream of the long ride—neither of us could remember their names. After dinner, the President promised, we'd look for the book.

We were still talking about our movie when the birthday cake was brought in and together we all toasted Franklin. Then the President made a special birthday toast to his son. When he finished, he said he'd like to drink another toast. He raised his glass, paused, looked at me and proposed a toast to the poor Republicans who obviously couldn't afford to put clothes on their children's backs.

Then we set out to look for "The Brushwood Boy." The President was pushed in his wheelchair. Our pursuit took us first to a small room with various pieces of china sprinkled around. I think there was a china chandelier and I think the china was Dresden, but what I specially remember was a figurine on the mantelpiece, delicate but explicit, of a young girl wearing a full-skirted ball gown and leaning back in a chair. Obviously the dance was over and she was exhausted from excitement; also her feet were tired, for she had kicked off one shoe . . . and there the shoe lay, on the mantelpiece, an inch or so away from the figurine. I was entranced by the detached shoe and the President was so amused that he moved it away from the figurine another few inches.

We found books by Kipling but not the one we wanted—in that room or the second room we searched. We drifted back to the group.

A few days later at home I found my book that included "The Brushwood Boy." No wonder we couldn't remember the names of the main characters: They are simply called The Boy and The Girl throughout.

I wrote letters to both Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt and Mrs. James Roosevelt thanking them for the fine time I had had, and later I heard from a friend of John's that the President was delighted that I'd sent him sunflowers as a bread-and-butter present. I wished I really had done so, but even more I've always wished I'd sent him a copy of "The Brushwood Boy."

And, of course, my father's dire prediction was absolutely right. I'd come home a damned Democrat—irrevocably and permanently.

The Mandate of Heaven

ESSAY

By William Safire

HONG KONG — The four Chinese characters traditionally used to describe an earthquake are tien peng pi lieh—literally, "heaven crashes earth cracks."

However, in writing of the quakes still shuddering through northern China, the Communist press substitutes shan for tien—preferring "mountain" to "heaven," thereby avoiding any reminder of tien ming, "the mandate of heaven."

This ancient Chinese superstition held that rulers lost prestige and legitimacy—hence, the heavenly mandate to govern—if they proved incapable of coping with flood, famine, pestilence or earthquake. Not merely if natural disaster occurred, but if the response was inadequate — which made it a most sensible superstition.

How has the People's Republic of China responded to what may be the worse natural disaster of modern times, with one city larger than Washington, D.C., flattened and another with a population the size of New York's living in tents in the streets?

1. Mobilization. Masses of workers have been organized as relief battalions, repairing roads and rails; paramedics called "barefoot doctors" have been flown in to combat disease and tend the wounded in stricken areas: some coal mines, where thousands of miners must have been entombed, have been restored to operation.

This is the kind of labor-intensive, centrally directed and locally administered operation at which the Chinese know they are unexcelled. The leadership has declared war on the earthquakes' effects, knowing victory is in sight and a new epic will be created.

2. Exhortation. The propaganda apparatus uses the disaster to underscore the villainy of opposition to the revolutionary line. In an editorial titled "Open Criticism of Teng Hsiao-ping in Anti-quake and Relief Work," Peking's leading newspaper points out that "the struggle between the two classes, the two roads and the two lines sharpens each time a natural calamity occurs."

In addition, exhortation by example of heroism is used. Self-sacrifice, the submission of individual needs to the mass need — at the core of Maoist thought — is accentuated by the emergency and extolled in the press.

3. Rejection of help. A crucial part of this "war" is the stern assertion that the Chinese will take no outside aid. The degree of "self-reliance" is the fulcrum of the debate going on in China today: importation of foreign technology vs. bootstrap economics, purchase of foreign arms vs. do-it-yourself defense, the risks of capitalist corruption and Soviet revisionism vs. the risks of too-slow development.

Chairman Mao's last strength this year is being expended leaning toward more self-reliance, which is intended to pit "imperialism" (the Americans) against the "hegemonists" (the Russians), and would enable China to become powerful without becoming impure. The public rejection of humanitarian help from the outside world is not so much old-fashioned chauvinism as it is a dramatic way of showing the Chinese people how to succeed by going it alone.

4. Identification of leadership. It is all very well to talk of a "collective leadership" after Mao, but even people in Communist societies like to know their leaders, and the Chinese are as newly acquainted with Prime Minister Hua Kuo-feng as Americans are with Jimmy Carter. "Jimmy Who?" was surely echoed on the other side of the world by "Hua Who?"

Prime Minister Hua was placed in "general charge" of relief efforts by the Politburo. Such a role is a good way to become widely respected quickly (as Herbert Hoover discovered after World War I). Nine days after the first and worst earthquake, it was revealed that Prime Minister Hua was on the spot in the Tangshan area only two days after the quake.

That means that for one turbulent week, much thought was given to the wisdom of publicizing Prime Minister Hua as being in personal command. When the decision was made, a film of his tour was played on television and played up strongly in the press. China-watchers see this as potentially important in the succession.

5. Extrapolation of the example. As day dawned in Peking, one Westerner in a street tent was amazed to find himself surrounded by thousands of silent Chinese. Stoicism and order, rather than panic, have been widely reported.

So far only the Japanese—in their atomic anniversary week — have remarked on a long-range significance of the way the Chinese respond to disaster. A scientist in Japan estimated that the earth tremors in China had the force of 11,000 Hiroshima-type atom bombs.

China is determined to be the great power best able to survive an atomic attack. "Dig tunnels deep," ordered Mao many years ago, and today nearly every Chinese city is honeycombed with tunnels and shelters for civil defense.

Years from now, in estimates of national military strength, consideration will be given to the only organized response to nature's equivalent of an A-bomb dropped on an industrial center. Communism in China may not have or want a "mandate of heaven," but its impressive response to a calamity has strengthened its hold on 900 million Chinese.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS

By C. L. Sulzberger

ATHENS—In a provocative interview to be published shortly by the London magazine "Encounter," George F. Kennan, American diplomat and historian, laments the inadequacy of the United States political system, the concepts and methods of its foreign policy, and the frequent lack of quality in Presidential candidates presented to the people of the United States.

He says: "I do strongly object to the fact that our political parties confront the electorate time after time with a choice of deplorable mediocrities. We must find some way to restore what I am sure was the intention of the Founding Fathers, that is to say, make certain institutional arrangements whereby the people for high public office are selected from the better men in our country and not from among the vulgar, dull, sluggish and untutored."

Mr. Kennan, now professor emeritus at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton is gloomy about present prospects. "I do not think that the United States civilization of these last forty to fifty years is a successful civilization," he says.

"I think this country is destined to succumb to failures which cannot be other than tragic and enormous in their scope. . . . I am in despair about this country, not so much from the standpoint of what it is doing to other people, which has not been that horrible, as from the standpoint of what it is doing to itself. . . .

"I can't see the answer to the problems of modern civilization in the framework of our highly urbanized industrial society. This society bears the seeds of its own horrors—unbreathable air, undrinkable water, starvation . . . we have nothing to teach the world. We have to confess that we have not got the answers to the problems of human society in the modern age."

He regards United States policy against this pessimistic background, saying: "I am afraid there is long going to be a tendency for individual legislators and politicians in this country to try to exploit the foreign policy process for their own domestic political ends."

"As long as they do this, they inflict a sense of incoherence on American foreign policy, because we are pushed into taking actions in the foreign field, not for their effectiveness in the matters with which they purport to deal, but for their ulterior function here at home."

Mr. Kennan thinks Washington should mind its own business more. He adds: "We should not accept new commitments [and] we should gradually reduce our existing commitments to a minimum, even in the Middle East."

He doesn't desire to "cut our commitments to Western Europe abruptly", but thinks the area leans too heavily upon us. "There is, for example, no reason . . . why Western Europe should not put up a respectable conventional [defense] force of its own. In terms of population and industrial potential, Western Europe is at least fully equal to the Soviets."

He thinks Western Europe's future "lies along moderate socialism" and that if it detaches itself from Washington, Eastern Europe will increasingly wish to detach itself from Moscow. "As the large West European Communist parties become independent from Moscow, the East European parties will have alternative poles of orientation. . . .

"The Soviet leaders always have had to recognize that a Communist Party which comes to power in a given country and [gains control of] the resources of that country is in a far more independent position vis-à-vis Moscow than a struggling revolutionary party which is dependent on Soviet support. . . . Do you think sophisticated Western Marxists would really accept Russian tutelage? Look at Moscow—it is ideologically the most bankrupt capital in the world."

The retired ambassador has sufficient faith in human rationality to minimize chances of nuclear holocaust, and therefore he would never advocate yielding to atomic blackmail. But he fears ecological and demographic disaster within seventy years.

He doesn't consider the Russians "ten feet tall—[a people] who can't adequately house their population, who are rapidly losing their prestige and leadership in the World Communist Movement."

He prefers to concentrate on American decadence. "Show me," he demands, "an America that has pulled itself together and is what it ought to be, then I will tell you how we are going to defend ourselves from the Russians. . . . I sometimes wonder what use there is in trying to protect the Western World against fancied external threats when the signs of disintegration within are so striking."

BROWN U. NAMES PRESIDENT TODAY

Head of Minnesota College Chosen After Long Hunt

Special to The New York Times

PROVIDENCE, R.I., Aug. 13—Brown University will name Dr. Howard R. Swearer, president of Carleton College in Northfield, Minn., as its 15th president tomorrow ending a long effort to fill the post.

The selection of Dr. Swearer, 44 years old, was disclosed today in Minneapolis. He will be named officially at a meetng of the Brown Corporation, the 56-member group that functions as the university's trustees, tomorrow morning. Rumors about the choice had been circulating for more than a week.

Dr. Swearer, who has been president of Carleton since 1970, is a political scientist, a former professor of the University of California, Los Angeles, and a former Ford Foundation official.

He will replace Dr. Donald F. Hornig, who announced in July 1975 that he would resign effectice last month, ending a six-year term troubled by budget disputes that led to a four-day student strike in 1975.

An initial search for a new president ended last March when a committee of students, teachers, alumni and corporation members was unable to find an acceptable nominee among 500 candidates considered.

Charles C. Tillinghast, Brown chancellor, who is chairman of the board of Trans World Airlines, then named a 14-member group of corporation members to resume the search, headed by Mr. Tillinghast and advised by 18 students, faculty members and administrators.

Dr. Swearer had been among the top choices of the original search committee, but he was not available then, the university said.

Mr. Tillinghast said that Dr. Swearer would take office "no later" than Feb. 1 at the 213-year-old university, which has 5,100 undergraduate and 1,300 graduate students.

Oil Leases Off L.I. Are Blocked; Faulty Impact Statement Cited

Weinstein cited a deficiency in the environmental-impact statement prepared by the Interior Department as the reason for granting the injunction.

Governor Carey and Governor Byrne of New Jersey, and officials of Nassau and Suffolk Counties hailed the judge's decision. Sarah Chasis, a lawyer for the Natural Resources Defense Council, which is a party to the suit, said the injunction represented a "substantial victory."

A three-volume impact statement was prepared in connection with the proposed leasing of 876,750 acres in an area 60 miles south of Long Island and 47 to 90 miles east of New Jersey. The Interior Department, which will supervise the lease sale, is required to prepare an impact statement, under the provisions of the National Environmental Policy Act.

While the plaintiffs in the suit had alleged multiple violations of the National Environmental Policy Act, the Coastal Zone Management Act and several other Federal statutes, Judge Weinstein said the Interior Department's only mistake had been its assumption that oil and natural gas on the outer continental shelf would be transported to the East Coast through pipelines.

He said the impact statement had failed to take into account the states' power to forbid pipelines running onto their shores. If the states exercised that option, the oil would have to be transported by tankers, and that would increase the chances of destructive spills tenfold, the judge said.

There is "no meaningful discussion of this vital dimension of the environmental problem," the judge said, adding that this "failure violates the National Environmental Policy Act.

Yesterday's ruling stemmed from two separate suits that had been joined for the purpose of applying for a preliminary injunction to block the lease sale.

One suit was filed in February 1975 by Nassau and Suffolk Counties and several Long Island municipalities. It asked for a permanent injunction to prevent the lease sale until there was "demonstrated compliance" with the National Environmental Policy Act.

The second suit was filed last June by the State of New York and the Natural Resources Defense Council. It seeks a permanent injunction against the national lease sale program and this particular lease sale off the East Coast.

Sale Might Proceed

"We're not saying there should be no sales," said Joseph J. Zedrosser, an assistant state attorney general of New York. "We're saying the way the Interior Department has structured this program, it should not proceed, because it violates the law," Mr. Zedrosser added.

The injunction was granted yesterday pending a trial of the issues raised in the suits, which were filed against the Interior Secretary, Thomas S. Kleppe.

That trial is still some months off. However, even if the Interior Department's appeal of the preliminary injunction is rejected, there is still a possibility that the lease sale will be held before the trial of the suits.

Interior Department officials said that Judge Weinstein had left that possibility open when he wrote in his opinion that, after the environmental-impact statement had been revised to meet his objection, Secretary Kleppe might again decide to proceed with the leasing—"even if the oil must be transported by tanker."

A spokesman for the Exxon Corporation said:

"We couldn't be more disappointed. The decision is contrary to the advice of knowledgeable government officials and is not in line with the public's wishes in this matter."

A Shell Oil Company spokesman called the injunction "bad news for the American public."

REP. FLOOD LINKED TO A LUXURY TRIP

Democrat Accused of Using Public Funds on Cruise

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (UPI)—Representative Daniel J. Flood, Democrat of Pennsylvania, and his wife took a five-day cruise on the liner Queen Elizabeth 2 and stayed at luxury hotels at the expense of taxpayers on what was supposed to be an official trip to Europe last year, it was reported today by Scripps-Howard newspapers.

An article in the newspapers of the chain said that the entire 20-day trip cost $14,280, with more than $3,600 of the total coming from Government money supplied to military escort officers to assist Mr. Flood.

The rest of the Government money spent on the trip came from State Department funds and the operation and maintenance budgets of the Army and Air Force, Scripps-Howard reported.

The article said that Mr. Flood received official briefings a total of three working days on his trip through England, Scotland, Italy, West Germany and France.

Defense Department sources described it as the "most flagrant" abuse of Congressional travel abroad in the last two years, Scripps-Howard reported.

Mr. Flood was unavailable for comment on the trip, but a spokesman at his Washington office was quoted as saying that he believed the Congressman spent more time in briefings and offical meetings than the records indicated.

Mr. Flood, 72 years old, is a member of the Defense Subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee. The official purpose of the trip was to inspect programs and facilities of the Defense Department and the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Scripps-Howard said that Mr. Flood demanded and received "superior" and "deluxe" travel and lodging, including a five-day "deluxe class."

dent of the better transit group, an electrical engineer and professor in the urban affairs department of Fairleigh-Dickinson University, called on the public this time to "make a bang that even Mr. Yunich's insensitive ears can hear."

Among the other changes going into effect Aug. 30 according to the Transit Authority, are the following:

¶The K train (East New York to 57th Street) and the EE train (Continental Avenue, Queens to Whitehall Street) will be discontinued.

¶The N train (Coney Island to 57th Street express) will be extended as a local from 57th Street to Continental Avenue, partially replacing the EE. On the return trip, N trains will run as locals in Manhattan, too, and during the rush hours half of them will go to Coney Island, the other half terminating at Whitehall Street.

Shifts in Express Runs

¶The eight-car CC train (Eighth Avenue rush-hour local from the Bronx to Chambers Street) will be extended to Rockaway Park and the more-frequent, 10-car E train, which now goes as far as Rockaway Park will terminate instead at Chambers Street.

¶Only half of the rush-hour B trains will run as far north as 168th Street in Washington Heights; the others will terminate at 57th Street and the Avenue of the Americas.

Express operation is to be curtailed on parts of the E, F, J, M and N lines, according to a study of the new schedules by the Committee for Better Transit. The GG and M lines, which run every six to eight minutes in rush hours now, "will be cut back to every 10 minutes," according to the rider group. However, the Transit Authority said that the GG would run every eight minutes during rush hours, compared with every six minutes now.

The cuts going into effect Aug. 30 are the last, the M.T.A. says, in a three-p of "service adjust nally announced t last Dec. 17. But t said little or n them since, aside ing a formal state weekend.

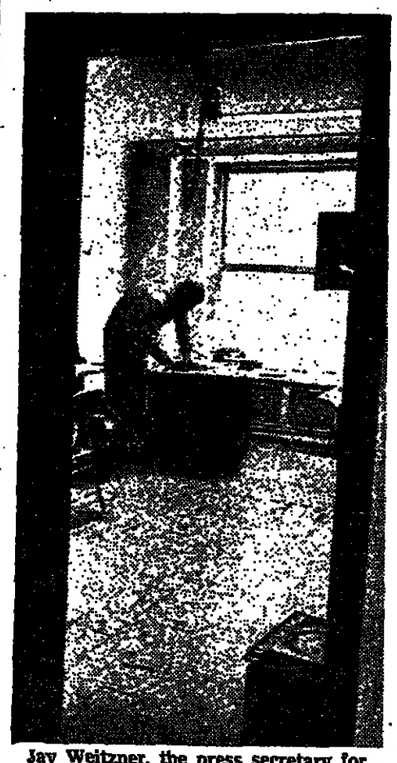
Teams Differ, Game's Same For 5 in Senatorial Primary

By MAURICE CARROLL



Jay Weitzner, the press secretary for Abraham Hirschfeld, is the third person in that position this year.

Familiar faces occupy the headquarters of the five Democrats seeking the nomination for Senator, but the team members, like professional athletes who have been traded, shade some of their previous personalities to reflect the candidates they serve.

For the teams gathered around Bella S. Abzug and Daniel Patrick Moynihan, both making their first run for the United States Senate, it is an attempt to see if a new element in the political mix can win the seat that has eluded the Democrats for so long.

For those who have joined Ramsey Clark and Paul O'Dwyer—and, to some extent, those with Abraham Hirschfeld—all of whom have made the race before, it is a chance to tinker with a formula that—almost—worked.

A visitor to the various headquarters would find, amid the campaign constants (blatant posters and cryptic messages taped to the walls, untidy stacks of pamphlets in the corners) some variations in tone as they prepare for the Sept. 14 primary.

The nervous verve of West Side-of-Manhattan politics permeates the Abzug-for-Senator office, for instance. The Moynihan team is a mixture of old-fashioned organization and academic fascination with words. At the Clark office, there is the air of a college bull session. South to north, through Manhattan, a political tourist could find the following things happening at the various headquarters:

O'Dwyer

Charles Keith held Card No. 6 in the National Maritime Union, he organized the state's Southern Tier for the C.I.O. and he fought on the anti-Franco side in the Spanish Civil War. He became a Greenwich Village house painter, then began buying and rehabilitating buildings. He now owns any number of them, including the apartment house at 31 West 11th Street with the three scabrous easy chairs in the downstairs lobby, which is the headquarters of City Council President Paul O'Dwyer's campaign, of which Mr. Keith is the chairman.

"No, he did not charm me into the job," said Mr. Keith of his old friend Mr. O'Dwyer, the Democratic nominee for Senator in 1968, an unsuccessful candidate for the nomination in 1970. "He sucked me into it."

This will be different than former O'Dwyer campaigns, said Mr. Keith, "We decided early on that he'd be the unity candidate or not run at all."

So Mr. O'Dwyer won the official "designation" of the state committee and now he and Mr. Keith are working their long-time labor connections for organizational help.

Public recognition? "With that silver mane?" asked Pat Earle, the finance director, gesturing toward a poster that depicted Mr. O'Dwyer's distinctive silhouette. "With that silver mane, don't you think we have it?" A political worker off and on for years, she had been helping with Carter-for-President campaign in New York when Sallie Batson, another former Carter worker, asked her to join the O'Dwyer effort. Miss Batson, the press secretary, is the only paid member of the small O'Dwyer staff.

In the office, there is a settled-in sort of old-style-radical labor mood.

"We'll put together the old New Deal coalition," said Mr. Keith. "First labor. Then ethnic groups. Some older people forget what Paul has done. Young people don't know. So we'll remind them."

Mrs. Abzug

The cheerful cheekiness of the Abzug office is attributable in part to the presence of Douglas Ireland, a moon-faced, 30-year-old man who chain smokes cigars, rattles out political gossip, pops vitamin pills, has known his candidate since the days of

Prof. Owen S. Rachleff, taking no chances, tossing salt over his shoulder at the Friday the 13th Club yesterday.

Triskaidekaphobes: Are You One of Them?

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

The Friday the 13th Club gathered on its big day yesterday to hear a New York University professor speak—not always seriously—about triskaidekaphobia, the irrational fear of the number 13.

"It is a fairly solemn subject, you know," Prof. Owen S. Rachleff said, smiling devilishly as he stroked the club's mascot, a black cat named Moo-Moo. "New York stores will lose about $250,000 worth of business today because people are afraid to venture out. They should know that most disastrous accidents happen at home."

Mr. Rachleff, an assistant professor of contemporary humanities at New York University, where he teaches a course debunking the occult, called "Witchcraft, Magic and Astrology," addressed about a dozen of the club's members at its regular meeting place, Nathan's Famous, at 43d Street and Broadway.

"I'm supposedly an expert in credology, the things people believe in," he said, "and this whole Friday the 13th business is quite fascinating. Fridays were a sexual holiday in good old Rome, but when Christianity came in, they decided Friday was a no-no. They tried to avoid the licentious goings-on of the pagan world."

'Some Good Things'

Adding to the bad rap that Friday the 13th has gotten through the years, he said, was the fact that Christ was crucified on a Friday, that Judas Iscariot was the 13th disciple, and that the 13th Tarot card is the card of death.

"But there are some good things about the number 13, too," he said, grabbing a nearby American flag and caressing its 13 stripes. "And in the Jewish faith, young men are confirmed at the age of 13."

Mr. Rachleff, who is the author of a new book called "The Secrets of Superstitions" ($7.95, Doubleday), said one of the things that disturbed him most about triskaidekaphobia was the practice of many landlords to call the 13th floor of their buildings the 14th floor.

"One time I had money in an apartment building where the tax assessment was based on 22 floors," he said. "Actually, it had only 21 floors, because someone had omitted the 13th floor. As a result, the assessment was $20,000 higher than it should have been."

Smashes a Mirror

Mr. Rachleff continued his demonstration of superstitions lecture by recklessly smashing a small mirror ("When you break it, you're supposed to break your soul, but my soul is so fragmented it doesn't matter anymore"), throwing salt over his left shoulder ("It's supposed to get in Satan's eyes"), and lighting three cigarettes on one match ("An unlucky practice because it supposedly gives Satan more time to snatch you.")

He giggled demoniacally.

Isn't he superstitious about anything? "Knock wood, I'm not superstitious," he said, smiling wryly as he knocked on the wooden lectern, "but we all develop certain rituals. Like these cheap, 85-cent cuff links I'm wearing. I bought them in Filene's basement in Boston in 1948, as sort of my first adult purchase. And I always wear them when I make a public appearance."

Mr. Rachleff, who was also wearing a black mink bow tie ("It's a good luck gift from the official witch of Bucks County"), ended his lecture by sprinkling salt on the head of the 1976 "Miss Friday the 13th," a skimpily dressed brunette who was introduced as Patricia Blackheart, a psychology student at New York University.

She said later that her real name was Patricia Conlon.

The Major Events of the Day

International

Syria put tight controls on its border with Lebanon yesterday, stirring speculation that Damascus was sending reinforcements to back up the 20,000 Syrian troops already in Lebanon. Arab diplomats in Beirut said the move could be in anticipation of more trouble in Lebanon following the capture of the Palestinian camp of Tell Zaatar by rightist Christians on Thursday. [Page 1, Column 4.]

South Africa pledged its support for the United States effort to bring about a negotiated settlement in Rhodesia, warning that failure would create new opportunities for intervention in southern Africa by the Soviet Union and Cuba. In the fullest statement that South Africa has made on its attitude toward the Rhodesian crisis, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, Dr. Hilgard Muller, said in an address before the governing National Party in Durban that "the South African Government welcomes this initiative." [1:2-3.]

National

President Ford's campaign managers issued a state-by-state delegate count showing that Mr. Ford had enough votes for a first-ballot victory at the Republican National Convention, but the figures were immediately challenged by Ronald Reagan's principal campaign strategist. According to The New York Times tabulation, President Ford was still 12 votes short of the 1,130 needed for nomination. [1:8.]

The Republican Platform Committee moved toward approval of a party document generally supporting President Ford's foreign policies. The committee rejected, by a vote of 55 to 43, a plank offered by delegates supporting Ronald Reagan's proposal that the United States keep "sovereign rights" over the Panama Canal. [1:6-7.]

Representative Wayne L. Hays, Democrat of Ohio, who admitted a sexual involvement with a woman he hired as a House secretary, announced that he would not seek re-election to the House, where he has been a member for 28 years. In a statement issued by his office, Mr. Hays said that ill health was the reason for his retirement "coupled with the harassment my family and I have taken from The Washington Post." He had been renominated for re-election in his home district by a wide margin. [1:7.]

The United States Steel Corporation announced a price increase of 4.5 percent for sheet and strip steel, its major product line, which is used by the automobile and appliance industries, effective Oct. 1. This was the second major steel price rise in three months. U.S. Steel put a 6 percent increase into effect June 14. [1:1.]

Optimism about finding life on Mars faltered with the announcement by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena that a Martian soil sample contained no detectable level of complex carbon-containing molecules that might be produced by microbes. But the scientists in Pasadena emphasized that the readings from Viking 1's instruments did not rule out the presence of microorganisms. [1:2].

Epidemiologists investigating the mysterious outbreak of the so-called legionnaire's disease in Philadelphia say they have found indications that two men who attended the International Eucharistic Congress there last week may have contracted the respiratory illness. The men have been hospitalized. [1:8.]

The Federal Bureau of Investigation was ordered by Attorney General Edward H. Levi to try to determine whether John Roselli, the organized crime figure, was murdered as a result of his Senate testimony on assassination plots of the Central Intelligence Agency against Prime Minister Fidel Castro of Cuba. [1:1.]

Metropolitan

The Federal Government was enjoined from carrying out the first sale of oil and natural-gas leasing in the Atlantic Ocean, which had been scheduled for Tuesday. Judge Jack B. Weinstein of Federal District Court in Brooklyn granted a preliminary injunction, in a suit brought by New York State, Nassau and Suffolk Counties, an environmentalist group and five Long Island municipalities. [1:5.]

The New York City Transit Authority announced that it would drop an additional 215 trains from its daily subway runs on Aug. 30, bringing to 855 the number of trains that have been canceled since early 1975. The authority said that the 215 trains, all on the BMT and IND lines, were being withdrawn because of declining ridership. [1:5-6.]

The organization that financed a student program working on New York City's cash-flow problem was incorrectly identified in The Times yesterday. The organization is the Urban Academy.

CHINATOWN GANGS VOW TO END FIGHT

In Return, They Want Help in Finding Jobs and to Be Taught English Language

The major youth gangs of Chinatown say they are ending the street fighting that has been terrifying residents and tourists in the lower Manhattan neighborhood and are looking for help in getting jobs and language instruction.

Members of the gangs made their intentions known at a news conference Thursday that was limited to representatives of New York's seven Chinese-language newspapers and a few civic leaders who agreed to remain silent until yesterday. The reason for the embargo was not explained but the gang members reportedly excluded other newsmen because they felt they had previously received poor treatment from the English-language press.

Official Doubt Raised

The police in Chinatown, who had been unaware that the gangs were planning to announce a shift away from violence, said they were "naturally glad," but, along with several civic leaders, one senior police officer betrayed a trace of doubt as he added that he hoped it would "actually happen."

The gang members themselves continued to refuse to speak with an English-speaking newsman who approached them.

As for the gangs' reason for change, Randy Lee, th president of the Lin iSng Association adn one of those at the meeting at the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Assocation at 62 oMtt Street, quoted a member of the Ghot Shadows as saying:

"We feel sorry that we may have been hurting business and frightening tourists who come to Chinatown. We feel sorry. We know it is absolutely wrong and we feel guilty about it and we want to compromise and not do any more fighting."

Another person who attended the meeting but asked to remain anonymous said his impression was that the gang members, who range in age from the early teens to the early 20's, were "tired of hurting each other and getting into trouble with the police."

In the first six months of this year three gang members were slain in Chinatown, the police said, as many as in all of last year.

The police were not immediately able to provide an estimate of the total number of youths in gangs in Chinatown, but of the four gangs represented at the meeting—the Ghost Shadows, the Flying Dragons, the Black Eagles and the White Eagles—each was said to have a strength of 40 to 50 youths.

Life Sentence Cited

Some residents who did not attend the meeting said that many gang members had been "shocked" and had taken "another look at what they were doing" after a 20-year-old member of the Black Eagles was sentenced to life in prison early last month for murdering a member of the Ghost Shadows.

Several police officers said they felt the gang members were reacting to pressure from elders in the community who were worried about business.

"Chinatown is a community that lives on people who visit," said Capt. John W. Ferriola, the commander of the Fifth Precinct, which covers Chinatown.

Captain Ferriola said in a news conference yesterday morning that he understood the gang members wanted to give up their weapons. For the next 10 days, he said, the department would accept guns and knives from the youths and extend immunity from the usual charge of illegal possession.

In response to the gang members request for help in finding work, Mr. Lee said, he and the president of the Chinese Consolidated Benevolent Association had said they would bring the youths together with th leaders of the community's 59 civic associations to develop a list of jobs and match them with individuals and to enroll the youths in English-language classes.

SOVIET GRANTS VISAS AT A HIGHER RATE

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (UPI) — The Soviet Union is slightly increasing the number of exit visas granted to Jews going to Israel and is issuing substantially more to West Germany and the United States, the State Department said today.

Asked whether more citizens had been permitted to leave since the Helsinki agreement last year promising respect for human rights and freedoms, the department said 13,000 exit visas were granted in 1975 to Soviet citizens wishing to move to Israel.

In 1975 the United States Embassy to Moscow processed 1,162 emigrants with visas for the United States, compared with 1,303 for the first six months of this year. The department said it understood that 5,000 to 6,000 visas to West Germany in 1975 were granted, compared with 5,000 through June this year.

2 Rubber Worker Panels Back Pact to End Strike

By AGIS SALPUKAS
Special to The New York Times

CLEVELAND, Aug. 13—An economic settlement that would increase wages and benefits by $3.20 an hour over three years was approved here today by two top committees of the United Rubber Workers.

The action greatly enhanced the possibility that the 115-day-old strike could be settled soon even though major noneconomic issues must still be resolved in bargaining scheduled next week.

The settlement was first approved today by the union's bargaining committee for the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, the strike "target" company, and then by the union's advisory committee representing all four companies involved.

Peter Bommarito, the president of the rubber workers, called the settlement, amounting to about 35 percent over three years, the highest in the union's history. "It's expensive," he said, "but you have to say we were entitled to it."

The agreement is the highest in percentage terms reached in labor negotiations this year.

Secretary of Labor W. J. Usery Jr. has emphasized that the rubber workers fell far behind in the last three years because they had no cost-of-living formula and they negotiated their wage increase when wage price controls were in effect in 1973.

Mr. Bommarito said that the settlement would have an impact on the current negotiations between the United Automobile Workers and the four auto makers for a new contract.

He said that he had indications that some of the auto makers "interfered against us" and put pressure on some of the tire companies to resist big wage increases in the second and third years of the contract.

Federal Plan Followed

The agreement basically followed recommendations made by Secretary Usery and James F. Searce, the director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service this week.

For the average rubber worker now earning $5.70 an hour wages would go up 80 cents an hour the first year, 30 cents the second and 25 cents the third. In addition, if the Consumer Price Index went up about 6 percent a year, the workers would receive hourly cost-of-living increases of 7 cents, 28 cents and 40 cents over the three years.

A benefits package of about $1.10 an hour is also provided.

The union thus won one of its key economic demands—an unlimited cost-of-living clause under which workers will get 1 cent an hour increase for every 0.4 increase in the Consumer Price Index during the first and second year and 1 cent every 0.3 increase in the third year.

The union also made gains in pensions, which will increase by $2.50 a month for every year of service, and improvements in medical insurance and coverage. It won increases for retired workers, which the companies had maintained was not a negotiable issue. Those retired will gain $1 a month for every year of service.

The U.A.W. is making similar demands to ease the plight of its retired members, who have lost earnings because of inflation. But the auto companies are adhering strictly to the contract which says that retirement benefits cannot be reopened in future negotiations.

Locals Must Approve

When the noneconomic issues are settled in the rubber industry, the master contract will be submitted to the locals in each of the companies—the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company, the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, the B. F. Goodrich Company and Uniroyal Inc.

If a majority of the locals representing a majority of the workers in a company approve they will then be called back to work.

Mr. Bommarito said that he could not estimate how long it would be before the 60,000 striking workers would be back on the job.

The agreement also calls for the union and the company to review past bargaining, which has been marked by long, often bitter strikes. It calls for the setting up of a three-member study committee to make a review of past bargaining and recommend how to improve the day-to-day relationship between the company and the union.

Unlike other unions such as the U.A.W., which can shut down a company and have immediate impact during a strike, the rubber workers were unable to prevent the four companies from making tires.

Most companies use supervisors and white-collar workers to keep up production. Their production plus production from nonstruck plants and companies kept tire production going at about 60 percent level.

Although the auto companies bought some tires from foreign concerns, the importers did not make a large dent in the domestic tire market during the strike.

The tire companies such as Firestone, which was the "target" company in the strike, do not face the same economic pressures as other industries during a strike.

During July, both sides stopped negotiating and just waited until Mr. Usery stepped in and brought the top bargainers to Washington.

Mr. Bommarito today praised Mr. Usery and Mr. Searce for helping to hammer out the agreement in five days of intensive talks.

5 Yonkers Men to Surrender In Beating of Busboy in 1971

By JOYCE MAYNARD

Five Yonkers men, convicted of assault in a 1971 attack with a baseball bat on a busboy, will surrender on Monday to the Sheriff's office in White Plains following the dismissal yesterday of a motion seeking commutation of their one- to four-year jail sentences.

Testimon in their 1973 trial showed that none of the five had struck a bloow, r wielded the bat responsible for brain-damage to a 19-year-old Jordanian immigrant, Salim Rabadi. The defendants were convicted on the ground that their association with the 14-year-old who actually struck the blow and their presence at the scene of the beating constituted conspiracy.

Yesterday's motion sought to overturn last June's ruling by Judge George Beisheim of State Supreme Court in Westchester County, who conceded that in spite of five years of good conduct on the part of the five convicted youths, he did not have the jurisdiction that would permit him to commute their sentences to probation.

In the decision yesterday, Presiding Justice Frank Gulotta of the Appellate Division in Brooklyn ruled that motions to modify the sentences were not appealable "since the appellants' contentions are excessiveness [of sentence] rather than illegality."

The five young men affected by the ruling are Thomas Ozarowski, 23, Martin Miller, 22, Thomas O'Neill, 23, Roger Santavicca, 22, and Russell DePasquale, 21.

Speaking from his office yesterday James Duggan, the attorney for one of the convicted men, said that he had been "dismayed" by the Appellate Court's ruling.

"None of these kids ever did anything physical," he said. "The one boy who struck the one blow only served five months in a reformatory.

"The only crime these other boys were guilty of was being with the offender when he struck the blow. Now they're looking at four years in jail for rehabilitation. And if they ever needed it they don't need any more, with five years of good behavior on their records, and no previous arrests."

A Disappointment

"They're just taking good kids out of good homes and burying them," said Julius Miller, the father of one of the convicted boys, now 22 years old. "I tell you the truth, me and my wife, we never dreamed a thing like this could happen. It's been disappointment after disappointment. The aggravation—it's eating us alive."

Mrs. Miller spoke three words and began to cry. Her son, Marty, who has been working as a wholesale clothing salesman, said, "I'm scared I'm going to have a nervous breakdown on account of this. It isn't just going to jail. What's driving me crazy is we didn't do what they said."

"I'm deeply sorry for the boy that got hit," said Tony Santavicca, also weeping. "But putting my son away just makes more sorrow."

Sylvia DePasquale, whose son will also be going to jail next week, had been in a Bronxville hospital, suffering from ulcers, when she got word of the motion's dismissal. "I got up and walked out the door," she whispered later in the day. "I had to go home. I just want to crawl into a hole someplace."

Angola Charges Saboteurs Try to Disrupt the Economy

LONDON, Aug. 13 (Reuters) — The Angolan Government charged today that saboteurs had stolen thousands of trucks, destroyed "countless bridges" and disrupted industrial production in a campaign designed to ruin the economy the Luanda radio reported.

The broadcast, monitored in London, quoted a communiqué from the ruling Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola as saying that the aim of the campaign has "to create instability among the people in an open challenge to the government and the M.P.L.A."

The Popular Movement, backed by the Soviet Union and Cuba, came to power in the former Portuguese colony earlier this year after defeating rival, pro-Western liberation movements in a civil war.

CULINARY UNION ASKS U.S. STUDY

Head of Group Says He and Officers Will Cooperate in Inquiry on Funds

By DAMON STETSON

Th president of the Hotel and Restaurant Employees and Bartenders International Union has invited the Labor Department to investigate allegations of possible mismanagement and wrongdoing on the part of the union.

In a letter to the department, Edward T. Hanley, who heads the union, promised full cooperation with such an investigation and said that he and his fellow officers "stood ready to expose every detail of our administration and every record of our union" to whatever investigation the agency decided to make.

Mr. Hanley said that he met earlier this week with two Labor Department officials, Bernard DeLury, an Assistant Secretary of Labor, and Carl H. Rolnick of the department's Labor-Management Services Administration.

'Slanted Articles'

The meeting, as well as the invitation for an investigation, Mr. Hanley said, were made in response to what he called "slanted and unfair articles which appeared during the past few weeks in U.S. News and World Report and The New York Times and suggested mismanagement and wrongdoing."

The Times reported on July 25 that the Labor Department and the Department of Justice had agreed to begin a major investigation into the internal management and financial affairs of the culinary union, which has had close ties to the International Brotherhood of Teamsters.

Government officials said that a comprehensive audit of the union's financial affairs would begin Sept. 1 in an attempt to determine whether Federal laws were violated in connection with the union's doubling of expenditures and an increase of more than 400 percent in top-level salaries since a change in leadership in 1973.

The Times reported that other officials said that there would also be an investigation of close ties between top union officials and Sidney R. Korshak, a Los Angeles labor lawyer who is considered by many law enforcement officials to be an important link between organized crime and legitimate business in the United States.

Mr. Hanley's letter to the Labor Department came long after officials there decided to conduct an investigation, and the letter appeared aimed at demonstrating that the union and its officers had nothing to hide and would cooperate fully in the proposed investigation.

The printed allegations regarding the culinary union, Mr. Hanley said in his letter, have had a destructive effect on the organizational efforts of many workers in the hotel and restaurant industry.

"Employers are now reprinting and distributing these articles to workers who are in the process of self-organization, thereby casting doubt and fears among those workers with respect to the advisability of supporting this union and frustrating their efforts to improve their lives through collective bargaining," Mr. Hanley said in the letter.

'Responsibility for Accuracy'

"Newspapers and magazines should not be immune to responsibility for accuracy," he continued. "They should not be allowed to get by, through carelessness and bias, with weakening the only machinery workers have to help themselves to a fuller measure of economic justice—trade unionism."

Mr. Hanley was not available yesterday for further comment regarding details of the union's operations and activities cited in the magazine and newspaper articles. His letter was made public in Washington by the public relations department of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Relations.

Mr. DeLury confirmed that he and Mr. Rolnick had met with Mr. Hanley earlier this week. The department, Mr. DeLury said, plans to go ahead next month with an investigation of the union.

Four Solar-Heated Centers Planned for Reservists

WASHINGTON, Aug 13 (AP) —The Pentagon announced today that four solar-heated and cooled reserve training centers could be constructed by 1978.

Acknowledging that initial construction costs for such facilities are greater than for conventionally heated and cooled buildings, the Pentagon said it expected "substantial dollar savings over a period of time."

The four projects are at Albuquerque, N. M.; Greenwood, Miss.; Seagoville near Dallas, Tex., and Norwich, Conn.

The Albuquerque project will be used jointly by Army, Navy and Marine Corps reservists. The Norwich project is being designed by the National Guard Bureau and the Adjutant General of Connecticut.

Prof. Arthur Wright of Yale, 62, Scholar of Chinese History, Dies

Arthur F. Wright, Charles Seymour Professor of History at Yale University and a leading scholar in Chinese studies, died Wedniesday in a New London, Conn., hospital at the age of 62.

He had been stricken earlier in the day while playing golf in Old Lyme, Conn. He lived in Guilford.

Dr. Wright specialized in Chinese social and intellectual history of the pre-modern era. He was, according to Prof. C. Martin Wilbur, former head of Columbia University's East Asian Institute, "a world-renowned scholar in his field—a great exponent of Chinese history from the humanistic point of view."

"There is no doubt," Professor Wilbur added yesterday, "that he was one of the top experts in the field of traditional Chinese history and philosophy."

Held Chair Since 1961

Dr. Wright had held the Seymour professorship since 1961, when it was set up after the university received an anonymous gift of $500,000 in honor of Dr. Charles Seymour, the historian who was Yale's president from 1937 to 1950.

After earning undergraduate degrees at Stanford University and at Oxford University, Arthur Wright received a master's degree from Harvard University in 1940 and his doctorate there in 1947.

During World War II, he and his late first wife, the former Mary Clabaugh, were arrested by Japanese authorities in Peking on Pearl Harbor Day. They spent two and a half years in a prison camp.

After the war the Wrights returned to Peking to study postwar conditions.

Mrs. Wright was a Chinese scholar in her own right and went with her husband to Stanford in 1947 to join its history faculty. Both were appointed full professors there in 1958.

Arthur F. Wright when he was named Charles Seymour Professor of History at Yale University in 1961.

When Dr. Wright was appointed a full professor at Yale the next year, Mrs. Wright was named an associate professor there at the same time. She died in 1970.

Dr. Wright served as chairman of the Yale Council on East Asian Studies and chairman of the Committee on Studies of Chinese Civilization of the American Council of Learned Societies.

In 1974, he returned to China as a member of a United States archeological expedition.

Dr. Wright was the author of two books, "Studies in Chinese Thought" and "Buddhism in Chinese History." He also edited a number of works in his field, among them "Confucianism and Chinese Civilization" and "The Confucian Persuasion."

ISTANBUL, Turkey, Aug. 13 (Reuters) — Two Palestinian guerrillas were taken amid strict security measures to the Istanbul Yesilkoy airport today for a re-enactment of the unsuccessful attempt Wednesday to hijack an Israeli airliner.

Four men, including Harold W. Rosenthal of Philadelphia, a staff aide to Senator Jacob K. Javits, Republican of New York, were killed and 30 people wounded when bombs were set off and the departure hall was raked with fire from automatic weapons.

The guerrillas, Mehti Mohammed Zilh, 22 years old, and Hussein Mohammed al-Rashid, 23, were taken to the airport handcuffed to two policemen. They were ringed by 10 police marksmen wearing bulletproof vests and carrying submachine guns. The Turkish Government plans to ask the death penalty.

Label Mixup Forces Recall Of 29,055 Bottles of Pills

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12 (AP) —The Ciba Pharmaceutical Company, Summit, N. J., is recalling 29,055 bottles of allergy pills because of a label mixup. Some bottles may contain a powerful stimulant that could prove fatal if taken according to directions, the Food and Drug Administration said today.

No injuries have been associated with the mixup, the agency said.

The 29,055 bottles containing 100 pills each of Pyribenzamine hydrochloride, an antihistamine prescribed for allergies, were distributed east of the Rocky Mountains from Jan. 16 to April 4.

In at least one case, the agency said, a bottle labeled as antihistamine actually contained the stimulant Ritalin, which is prescribe for patients suffering from narcolepsy, or uncontrolled sleepiness; hyperkinesis, or hyperactive behavior, and minor brain disorders in children.

The antihistamine tablets are light blue and carry the number 33 on one side. The Ritalin tablets are peach color and imprinted on one side with the number 34.

Nassau and Suffok Counties were still recovering today from the hurricane. The Long Island Lighting Company had 780 repair crews restoring power to the last of the 283,000 customers that had been affected by the storm. A Lilco spokesman said that almost all customers should have their lights back on by tonight. The New York Telephone Company said that roughly 3,600 Long Island customers were still without service, the majority of them in Suffolk County. Full service, according to a spokesman, should be restored by the weekend.

Some Jersey Beaches Closed

TRENTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—State environmental officials ordered the closing today of beaches in Cape May City and Cape May Point where raw sewage has floated ashore.

Commissioner David Bardin of the Environmental Protection Department said that beaches in Lower Township in Cape May County, which were shut down by the County Board of Health, should also remain closed until water samples were found to be satisfactory for swimming.

The problem was caused partly by the hurricane, Mr. Bardin said, explaining that because the area has combination storm and sanitary sewer lines, the treatment plant was bypassed for 36 hours during and after the hurricane and raw sewage was dumped with storm water directly into the Delaware Bay.

Preminger Shares Role With Some Great Art

Otto Preminger couldn't have directed a better final scene.

At the F.B.I. building at 201 East 69th Street yesterday, the film director walked into a conference room ablaze with television lights and filled with reporters and F.B.I. agents, to claim a painting that had been stolen from his New York offices last Dec. 14.

The painting, valued at more than $100,000, is entitled "Leise Deutung" ("Soft Interpretations") and was done by Vasily Kandinsky, the Russian artist.

"I feel safer now, knowing the F.B.I. is watching me," said Mr. Preminger, under the glare of the television lights.

'Had Given Up Hope'

"I can only say that I had completely given up hope," he added. "The New York City police had also given up," he said, taking the painting in hand and examining it closely.

According to Donald L. Mason, the agent in charge, the F.B.I. had traced the painting from New York to Philadelphia, back to New York and finally to Basel, Switzerland. Michael Stephen Forman, a 34-year-old advertising salesman of Brooklyn, has been charged in connection with the theft.

"I'm not an art collector," Mr. Preminger said. "I just see a painting I like and buy it. And having this one back is like having an old friend return."

Mr. Mason, who had been on the case from the beginning, was beaming with pride.

"Today is my last day before I retire," the 51-year-old F.B.I. agent said, "and I can't think of a more satisfying way to go out."

Fear Ripples in Quiet Section of Brooklyn

By PRANAY GUPTE

Except for the pinball machines in some stores and the occasionally boisterous youths they attract during the evenings, there has been little in recent years to disturb the calm of the Bay Ridge-Borough Park area.

It is today, as it has been for more than 50 years, a predominantly Italian neighborhood, one of those sections of Brooklyn where residents tell you they don't mind at all being in the outreaches of the borough.

But those pinball machines and their aficionados seem to have spawned a certain sort of suspicion of strangers in the minds of residents—almost a conviction that if their neighborhood had become a bit less sedate and safe it is surely because of those kids who hang around on street corners and harass the elderly people

Now such suspicions, however tenuous they may be, have been heightened.

On Thursday evening, Joseph and Angelina Tucci, an elderly couple who lived at 1048 63d Street, were found murdered in their home. They were both bound and gagged, the police said, and they appeared to have been beaten to death with blunt instruments, probably hammers from the cellar where Mr. Tucci sculpted flower pots.

Surge in Burglaries

The police said yesterday that they had no suspects, but they indicated that robbery could have been the motive in the murders, for the Tucci's home had apparently been ransacked.

It was the second time in a month that a home on the block had been invaded, the police reported. Some days ago, the house next to the Tucci home had been virtually stripped bare. The police say that, there has been a surge in burglaries in many sections of the Bay Ridge Borough Park area and that they do not know how to account for it.

Yesterday, residents of 63d Street, between 10th and 11th Avenues—the location of the Tucci house—sat on their red brick stoops and reminisced about the Tuccis. They recalled, for example, how Mr. Tucci, a 74-year-old retired gardener, would advise neighbors on the care and nurturing of their begonias and chrysanthemums.

And they remembered fondly the pastries, richly laden with cream, that Mrs. Tucci, who was 82, would bake for the neighborhood children.

Residents recalled these things not just as a tribute to the dead couple but also, it seemed, because their actions represented something unusual in a neighborhood that has been marked in recent years by a decline in neighborliness.

"I don't know what it is but people here don't seem to mix as much any more,' one woman, who has lived on 63d Street for more than 50 years, said glumly. "Maybe it's television that's keeping them indoors. Or perhaps it is fear of being involved with other people."

Then she told of how a neighbor's son, who used to shop for groceries for her, was increasingly reluctant to do so.

As she spoke, Michael Bunda Jr., a sophomore at Fordham University, broke in.

"But don't you think that neighborliness is no longer apparent in much of the city?" he said.

"Perhaps," the woman said, "but they have block parties elsewhere and we don't here."

Another resident, Ann DiCicio, who has lived on the block for more than 30 years, suggested that it was the fact that some new residents had moved into the $30,000, mostly two-story homes, that had altered the relations among neighbors. "It takes a while to get to know one another," she said. "So meanwhile everyone keeps to themselves."

The fact that neighbors do not mix as much was cited by Anthony Razzo as the reason behind the increase in burglaries in the area.

"What better place to rob than one where you know people mind their own business?" he said.

For some of the residents of Bay Ridge, particularly those on 63d Street between 10th and 11th Avenues, "minding their own business" yesterday meant going to the M & M Stationery Store nearby to buy the papers —one English-language and another Italian-language—or else sitting under the block's maple and sycamore trees and chatting quietly.

No one watered the chrysanthemums in the tiny front yard of the Tucci home.

G.M. Calls Pollution Monitors Faulty

By DAVID BIRD

General Motors Corporation, the country's largest auto maker, has challenged New York City's air-pollution control program, charging that the city's old and faulty monitoring devices were falsely indicating much more than the actual amount of contamination in the atmosphere.

The city replied yesterday that, while it had had problems with its monitors, the problems were corrected and that pollution from motor vehicles was still a serious problem that had to be controlled.

Ironically, the General Motors challenge was prompted by an audit released earlier this week by State Comptroller Arthur Levitt, which cited the high readings of carbon monoxide in the city's air and chided city officials for failing to control pollution by motor vehicles.

Almost all of the carbon monoxide—a poisonous, odorless and toxic gas—is generated here by motor vehicles.

Levitt Cites Readings

Mr. Levitt based his charge on readings showing that carbon monoxide levels in New York City streets were double and triple the safe maximums set by the Federal Government.

Robert A. Low, New York City's Environmental Protection Administrator, in reply to the audit, said that most of the city's strategy to clean up the air—as required by Federal law—was based on Detroit's being required to build cars that pollute less, and that Detroit was not doing its job.

Mr. Low said that the auto makers were delaying in manufacturing such cars, and that they had persuaded Federal regulators to give them more time to develop "cleaner" engines.

"Washington has imposed a double standard," Mr. Low said in an interview. "They have been gracious in extending the time Detroit has to clean up auto emissions while they have been firm with us in their demands that we clean up the air."

Monitor Called Defective

In a letter to Mr. Low on Thursday, Paul E. Svoboda, the New York public relations director for General Motors, said automotive carbon monoxide had been reduced by more than 83 percent since emission controls were put into effect.

He said that the city had not recorded these reductions because one of its key monitors, a 15-year-old device on 45th Street west of Lexington Avenue, had erroneously been giving readings 40 percent above the actual level.

Mr. Svoboda cited a report by the State's Department of Environmental Conservation saying that the 45th Street Station "was not acceptable." He added:

"A significant aspect of the shortcomings of the 45th Street monitor — and possibly the other two [carbon monoxide] devices in Manhattan—is the credibility of the city's air-pollution control program. If the necessity of the so-called 'strategies' was based on data supplied by these three devices —as it seems it must have been —the entire program is exposed to serious question."

Newer Device Installed

State officials confirmed that the readings by the 45th Street monitor had been exaggerating the level of carbon monoxide, but they said it had since been replaced with a newer, more effective device.

But even with the correction made, the carbon monoxide levels still exceed the safe level, the officials said.

The New York State Air Quality Report for 1975, issued by the Department of Environmental Conservation, said that over the previous year there had been "little or no significant change in carbon monoxide levels."

As for the General Motors challenge, Mr. Low said, "We don't believe the whole system should be attacked because of one faulty monitor." He added that the city still had a long way to go to improve its system. "We're not alibiing. We've got to do better," he said.

Newark Policeman Shot to Death During Holdup

Special to The New York Times

KEARNY, N. J., Aug. 13—A Newark policeman was shot to death this morning during a holdup of a check-cashing company in this west Hudson County community.

The officer, John W. Snow of Iselin, a 54-year-old father of four children, was found at the wheel of his radio car in the driveway of the Highway Check-Cashing Service. The windshield had been cracked by a bullet reportedly fired by one of two gunmen who escaped with $51,500, most of which the officer was carrying.

More than 200 policemen took up the hunt for the robbers aftr Officer Snow died at West Hudson Hospital wiith a bullet wound of the neck. He had been on the force since 1953.

The police said that Officer Snow had picked up $46,000 at the Lincoln Park branch of the First National State Bank in Newark for Jacob Roth, who operates the check-cashing service.

Because of a high incidence of robberies, policemen have been assigned to financial establishments for money deliveries.

According to Hubert Williams, the Newark Police Director, Officer Snow arrived at the check cashing concern during the holdup.

One robber standing outside fired the shot that killed the policeman as he sat in the driver's seat of his radio car, according to the police.

Mr. Roth told the police that he was inside his office with his son and a customer when one robber came in and took $5,500 at gunpoint. The other money was removed from Officer Snow's radio car, according to the police.

The gunmen fled in a car that was found abandoned a few miles away.

Mr. Williams said the car belonged to Octavio Valdez of Union City, but was used on a construction site by a number of workers. Mr. Valdez was being questioned by the police.

Officer Snow was regularly assigned to the traffic division. His work as a highway radar patrolman had prompted truckers and drivers with citizens' band radios to give him the nickname Snowman, which was used to warn speeders headed south on U.S. Route 1 in Newark.

Moves to Restrict Local Waste Disposal would also have to install monitoring wells to determine if hazardous substances were percolating through the soil and might endanger underground water sources.

Once every three months samples would have to be taken from the monitoring wells and analyzed, with the results being sent to the Department of Environmental Protection. If the analysis shows a real or potential threat to drinking-water supplies, the state could order the concern to cease accepting waste materials and to make immediate steps to prevent continued contamination and to halt it.

The new regulations would also prevent solid-waste-disposal facilities from accepting any hazardous materials, chemicals, bulk liquids or pesticides after March 15, 1980, unless they had installed a system for the interception, collection and treatment of any and all leachate generated at the facility. The system has to have the approval of the Department of Environmental Protection.

In Fish Fossil Rubbing, 'There's No Going Back'

"The first thing to do is take a piece of paper and tape it to the plastic molds of the fish fossil," Wendy Davidson explained to the museum volunteer.

"Then take the carpenter's pencil and trace in the direction of the bones. Lightly at first, then heavier. If you make a mistake, there's no going back."

Miss Davidson, a graduate art student at Hunter College, was at the American Museum of Natural History explaining the delicate technique of making rubbings on rice paper or tissue paper from fish fossils.

The fossils—of sunfish and perch, among others—are 40 million to 160 million years old.

"Fish fossil rubbing is a lot harder then the traditional graveyard tombstone rubbing," said Miss Davidson, who perfected the technique after months of experimenting with different kinds of pencils before discovering the right one—the carpenter's pencil.

The 10 museum volunteers in the fossil program—they range from 14 to 65 years old—are making the rubbings in a working area open to the public, which is entitled "This Exhibit in Preparation." The purpose is to show the museum's visitors what is involved in setting up a display—in this case, the museum's showing of its fish-fossil collection.

After the rubbing is finished—a process that takes the inexperienced hand about 45 minutes (10 minutes for a trained hand) — colored pencils can be used to trace the background, after which the finished product can be mounted.

"It's scientific as well as decorative," said Martin Cassidy, manager of the museum's center for the preservation and reproduction of its art facts.

The museum is training the volunteers in the fossil rubbing ad that they can demonstrate the technique to the public on Oct. 2, when the museum opens its doors free of charge for its seventh annual West Side Day.

Father Hold His 2 Children Hostage

A 26-year-old Brooklyn man, estranged from his wife, took his 2-year-old daughter and 7-year-old son from their mother's home in Queens to his apartment at 30 Martense Street, in the Flatbush section, and held them at knifepoint yesterday until the police and relatives persuaded him to surrender. The police said they went to his apartment at 9 A.M. to arrest the man, Darnell Oliver, but it took until about 6 P.M. before both children were released and the father gave himself up.

7 Yonkers Schools to Remain Closed

The seven Yonkers schools that were voted closed last April by the Board of Education because of fiscal difficulties will not be reopened "except in an emergency situation," said the board's president, Angelo Paradiso. One board member, Joseph Spencer, had proposed that all but two of the schools be reopened, but he withdrew his resolution at a board meeting Thursday night. Parents of students at School 15, an all-white school on the East Side, have filed a petition with the State Commissioner of Education, Ewald B. Nyquist, to keep it open.

2 Queens Women Held in Killing

Two Queens women were arrested for homicide, conspiracy and criminal solicitation in the shooting death of the estranged husband of one of them five months ago in the couple's bungalow in the Edgemere section of the Rockaways. The victim, Herbert Taylor, 29 years old, was found shot in the house, at 321 Beach 13th Street, which was owned by his wife, Carol-Ann, 27. Mrs. Taylor was arrested along with a friend, Elizabeth Taylor, 38, who is not related. Both women live at 145-25 250th Street in Rosedale, Queens.

From the Police Blotter:

Detective Joseph Rauchet of the Street Crime Unit critically wounded a man reportedly burglarizing a clothing store owned by the detective's wife at 2034 Flatbush Avenue in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn. He drove five blocks to the store from his home after being alerted by a telephone burglar-alarm hookup. The police reported that he fired five shots at Joseph Smith, 25 years old of 108 Frank Court, Brooklyn, who was admitted to Kings County Hospital. A suspected accomplice, Robert Stang, 31, of 3108 Quentin Road, Brooklyn, also was captured. . . . ¶A Bronx man was shot fatally by one of the occupants of a car parked in a lot at Westchester Avenue and Rogers Place in the Hunts Point Section of the Bronx. The car then sped off. The victim was identified as Joseph Reddick, 28, of 956 Stebbins Avenue. . . . ¶Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey Corrigan of 135 Nelson Avenue, the Bronx, and a friend were robbed of $265 and $55 worth of jewelry in Washington Square Park. Mrs. Corrigan said that no one had come to their help in the crowded park when her husband had been pistol-whipped by one of the four armed robbers.

Moynihan Accuses Washington Of Ignoring Northeast Economy

By RONALD SMOTHERS

Daniel P. Moynihan, told a conference of a black trade-unionist group, last night that leadership in Washington "seems oblivious" to the economic crisis of the Northeast and called for the election of officials with the "will and vision to make economic prosperity a reality for all."

The three-day conference on Harrison House in Glen Cove, "Economics and Politics," at L. I., is being sponsored by the Black Trade Unionist Committee of the New York City Central Labor Council.

Mr. Moynihan, who is seeking the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate, was greeted with polite applause.

His appearence was considered an important one since the former United States Representative at the United Nations and author has been opposed by a number of influential black politicians and civic leaders around the state. At the same time he has won quite a bit of support from leaders of large labor organizations.

"Our nation's economic crisis is highlighted by the fact that so many black young people have given up hope of finding jobs," he said. "At the same time the Federal Government continues to move resources from the Northeast to the southern and western portions of the country."

Mr. Moynihan also emphasized the need for a new Federal emergency revenue-sharing act to help New York and other financially troubled cities maintain their public services. He said the emergency plan should provide some $2 billion a year for a 10-year period and he estimated that New York State would be eligible for between $500 million and $750 million a year under such a plan.

The candidate's quest for black votes has been hurt by lingering animosity among blacks to his 1970 memorandum, while he served as a special adviser to President Nixon, advocating "benign neglect" of the heated debate over the racial issues of the 1960's. His recent stand calling for a curb on United States aid to developing African countries, has also angered many blacks.

Charles Faulding, president of the black trade unionist group, which is made up of officers of 62 unions in the public and private sector in the city, said that Mr. Moynihan and another Senate aspirant City Council President Paul O'Dwyer, were invited to speak after they had asked for a chance to address the conference. Mr. O'Dwyer will speak today.

"We're concerned about what we should do," said Dr. Antoinette Sobin, chairman of the group's political action committee. "We see our leadership leaning toward either Mr. Moynihan or Mr. O'Dwyer and many still have deep reserva-

SOYBEAN FUTURES CLIMB IN PRICE

Gain Confounds Experts Following Crop Report

Soybeans managed to confound even expert traders yesterday by rising in price although the Department of Agriculture crop report indicated a better than expected harvest.

The beans rose more strongly in price than corn, which traders expected to rise sharply because of a lower than expected crop estimate. All this meant a confusing day for floor traders on the Chicago Board of Trade.

November beans jumped 19 cents a bushel, or almost the daily limit of 20 cents, and closed at $6.59, up from $6.40 a bushel. Some contracts were up the limit during the session. Corn futures for September delivery closed at $2.80, up from $2.73½ a bushel.

The strength in soybeans was attributed by traders partly to heavy buying by local traders, Drexel Burnham & Company, a commission house, and by Continental Grain, a large exporter. There was some thought that the reduction in the corn crop might influence the feeding of more soybean meal products to cattle, and the soybean meal price rise could be said to be the leader yesterday.

Traders noted that every time corn prices rose some of the smaller commercial users of corn sold, possibly for hedging purposes. This selling tended to put a brake on the price rise in corn.

Silver prices on the Commodity Exchange moved ahead slightly but the rises were limited to about a cent an ounce.

Limit rises of 2 cents a pound were made in the cotton futures contracts on the New York Cotton Exchange, and the reason was the crop estimate made Thursday by the Government. Apparently traders had expected a larger crop than the figures projected.

The October delivery closed at 79 cents a pound, up the 2 cents daily limit.

the dump-Johnson movement and is the campaign manager.

The theory in Abzug headquarters, a scruffy office complex at 130 East 40th Street, is that the race is between the Representative from Manhattan's West Side and Mr. Moynihan. The wall in Mr. Ireland's office features 11 photographs—four of Mrs. Abzug, one of Mr. Ireland (with Brooklyn leader Meade H. Esposito) and five of Mr. Moynihan who, moon-faced himself, is grimacing unflatteringly in three of them and posing with President Richard Mr. Nixon, one of several Presidents for whom he worked, in two others.

"On the 15th of last month, when I found I didn't have a primary, I called up and said I'd be glad to work," said State Senator Carol Bellamy, who joined John Burke, late of Bayh-for-President, and Maggi Peyton, with the Abzug campaign from the start, in fashioning a field organization.

Lynne Abraham, who worked on the McCarthy-for-President campaign, handles press.

The office mood is controlled frenzy.

"There's no mystery in our plan," said Mr. Ireland. The Abzug office is decorated with the buttons showing a silhouette of the candidate and the big-brimmed hat that is her trademark; they bear no name, evidence of the certainty that Mrs. Abzug has little problem being recognized. "All you have to do is get her in front of people," Mr. Ireland said.

Moynihan

Some politicians cultivate an air of mystery. Joseph F. Crangle, the cherub-faced leader of the efficient Erie County organization, is one of the most successful practitioners of the trade in recent New York history and his air is simplicity itself—to do the basic things conscientiously and relentlessly and to head straight for the target.

So, when he saw the splash that Mr. Moynihan made as American representative at the United Nations, Mr. Crangle wrote him a letter. If Mr. Moynihan would like to run for Senator, he wrote, he would like to help elect him.

Not without some pauses for contemplation, Mr. Moynihan decided to run. "And I'm into everything here," Mr. Crangle said the other day. He is planning to spend Tuesday through Friday in the Moynihan offices at 355 Lexington Avenue at 40th Street, a building that always seems to house a political headquarters or two.

"Joe is the chairman of the board and I'm the chief executive," said the campaign manager, Meyer Frucher, who says plaintively that everyone calls him Sandy and he wishes the newspapers would, too, and whose earliest political memories are of being a passenger in a sound truck that blared the virtues of Adlai E. Stevenson to an unreceptive Jersey City, where Mr. Frucher was born 30 years ago.

Mr. Crangle and Mr. Frucher divide the nuts and bolts. Dick Stout, a former Newsweek writer, late of the Udall-for-President campaign, handles the press.

The office mood is mixed political and academic.

The plan? "He spoke up for America," reads the slogan on a poster of Mr. Moynihan at the United Nations, and that theme, plus the claim of "winnability" is the Moynihan message. "We'll get him around," said Mr. Frucher. "He's on the street every day. We plan five major speeches."

The office mood is Collegiately ideological.

As for the plan: "We are going to issue more position papers than might be politically smart," said Mr. Green. But Mr. Clark, he said, was determined to run an issue-based campaign. "I am really looking forward," Mr. Green said, "to the televised debates."

Clark

Outside the big glass windows with the sign "Ramsey/'76" is a view resembling a painting of Paris, the corner of the Public Library softened by the green of the trees at 42d Street and Fifth Avenue.

Inside, Ken Lerer, a cool political professional at age 24, is calculating when Clark-for-Senator should stop plowing money back into mail fund-raising efforts and start buying broadcast time.

Mr. Clark upset the Democratic organization with a country-style primary campaign, limiting individual contributions to $100, and won the nomination for Senator in 1974. "We're doing it better this time," said Mr. Lerer, who was deputy campaign manager last time.

This time he serves under Mark Green, 31 years old, who was working with Ralph Nader when Mr. Clark called late last year to ask him to be campaign manager.

Hirschfeld

Everybody laughed when Abraham Hirschfeld ran for the Democratic nomination for Senator in 1974. But he got a respectable 23 percent of the vote, running third in a three-man field. Now, with no legal limit on what he can spend himself, the current effort by Mr. Hirschfeld, a wealthy builder of parking garages, has taken on that air of strain that afflicts the campaigns of outsiders who begin to perceive themselves as possible winners.

Frank Ceo, the campaign manager, celebrated his 28th birthday party in the headquarters at 41 West 57th Street the other day by studying gaudy red-and-white bus posters and by telling how he had gone to work for Mr. Hirschfeld in the 1974 campaign, shifted over to supervise a garage project, then came back this year as campaign manager.

The press secretary, Jay Weitzner, is the third to hold that job this year. A seasoned professional, he last worked for the Jackson-for-President campaign in New York. Tom Bach, 30 years old, another political professional, prepared for his job as coordinator by working a year for the mercurial Mayor of Utica, Edward Hannah.

The office mood is edgy.

The plan? "He got more than 200,000 votes two years ago, with nothing going for him." said Mr. Bach. 'There's no reason he should lose any of that." The Hirschfeld-for-Senator campaign will spend a lot of money to spread the two themes that the candidate is a successful businessman with an antipolitics image.

New-Car Sales Up 48.4% To Peak for Aug. 1-10

Special to The New York Times

DETROIT, Aug. 13—American new-car sales increased 48.4 percent in the Aug. 1-10 period and broke an 11-year-old record, according to reports from the four United States auto companies today.

Sales increased to 194,760 from 131,218 a year ago. The daily selling rate of 24,345 exceeded the record of 23,324 for the period set in 1965.

Five foreign auto manufacturers have agreed to raise their prices in the United States, settling the largest antidumping case ever undertaken by the Government. Page 30.

Analysts cited surprisingly strong sales by the General Motors Corporation. G.M. reported record sales, up 72 percent from last year. The company accounted for 62.2 percent of the domestic market, its highest share since 1971.

G.M. pointed to selling contests by its Chevrolet and Buick divisions. Chevrolet sales were up 94 percent and Buick's 92 percent.

"Undoubtedly some people are buying 1976's to beat the 1977 price increases," an analyst said. "But this happens every year." The industry has announced tentative 6 percent price increases on new models.

Auto industry sources also reported continued strong demand for larger automobiles. G.M. is now selling the last of its large cars in preparation for 1977 models that will be a foot shorter and 750 pounds lighter.

While recent sales had been strong, the record was not expected. It was the first time

Stocks Rise 3.07 on Dow Despite Big Inventories

By ALEXANDER R. HAMMER

Despite the biggest rise in business inventories in 18 months, the stock market registered a small gain yesterday—3.07 points on the Dow-Jones industrial average to 990.19—in slow trading.

At the opening of trading the Commerce Department reported that business inventories rose $3.32 billion in June, the sixth consecutive monthly gain. This is another indication that the pace of the economic recovery is slowing.

In the afternoon, United States Steel announced 4.5 percent price increases for its sheet and strip products used in automobiles and appliances. Analysts noted that the move, which is effective Oct. 1, would further propel the inflationary trend. The stock closed at 50, down ¼. Other steel issues were mixed.

Analysts said that despite these unfavorable developments some bargain hunting helped firm prices in the afternoon, but that the market still lacked conviction, especially since volume remained light.

INQUIRY IS SOUGHT IN GULF GAS DEAL

Texas Eastern Also Cited by F.P.C. Judge in Failure to Deliver Pipeline Fuel

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—A Federal Power Commission judge recommended today that the Justice Department investigate the Gulf Oil Corporation and a natural-gas buyer, the Texas Eastern Transmission Corporation of Houston, for possible criminal conspiracy.

An F.P.C. administrative law judge, Raymond M. Zimmet, found that Gulf had failed to deliver to an interstate pipeline the volume of gas required under an F.P.C. certificate.

Mr. Zimmet also said that inaction on the part of Texas Eastern Transmission strongly hinted at a conspiracy by the two to withhold gas from the interstate market until the price had ben driven up, in violation of Federal antitrust laws.

The judge recommended that the F.P.C. refer the case to the Justice Department for investigation and appropriate criminal action.

Statements of Denials

Both Gyulf and Texas Eastern issued statements categorically denying any conspiracy.

Texas Eastern's statement went on to say that the records of the case prove "that Gulf has been and is delivering all the gas production available within the area of Texas Eastern's pipelines, diligent effort to connect substantial additional gas supplies."

Mr. Zimmet's decision is subject to F.P.C. review, and the parties named have 30 days to file exceptions to the decision.

The decision said that in 1963 the commission authorized Gulf to sell Texas Eastern a total of 4.4 trillion cubic feet of gas to be delivered in daily volumes of from 500 million to 625 million cubic feet.

Deliveries began in 1964, the decision said, and in 1971 Gulf sought to amend its certificate to raise the price. The commission denied the request.

Delivry Deadline

Mr. Zimmet said that in late 1975 the F.P.C. became aware Gulf was not delivering the certified volumes of gas and initiated a show-cause proceeding against Gulf and Texas Eastern.

He recommended that Gulf be given less than one month to begin delivering the maximum amount of gas. If the company fails to comply, he continued, the F.P.C. shhould move against Gulf in Federal Court to compel specified performance.

The judge said that when the F.P.C. denied Gulf's proposed certificate amendment, the commission contended that Gulf could not be relieved of its obligations at the expense of ratepayers.

"There is utterly no justification for Gulf either to gouge consumers through higher prices or to escape its obligations on some recently contrived economic theory," Mr. Zimmet said.

Inflation Is Key to Franc's Fall

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Aug. 13—The sagging French franc has once again spotlighted the fear of inflation as the dominant European economic issue, just as nations are pulling themselves out of the recession and looking toward the fruits of recovery. The steady decline of the franc, hovering on the brink of five to the dollar at 19.99 cents and shrinking even more in relation to the muscular Swiss franc and West German mark, is ascribed to a complex set of factors that Finance Minister Jean-Pierre Fourcade refuses to consider "dramatic."

Economic Analysis

He said the recent drop, from more than 21 cents in June resulted from "misunderstandings."

Single, Crucial Point

But foreign as well as unofficial French experts here stress the single, crucial point that French inflation continues to run at a rate two and a half times that of West Germany, regardless of each government's success in holding down percentage points domestically.

Early this year, the French Government was talking about holding the 1976 inflationary rate under 10 percent. Bonn has pressed below 5 percent. "That talk has been abandoned by everybody now," one diplomatic analyst observed. "Some are saying 11 percent and some more."

There is no immediate sense of crisis among officials, however, partly because a new economic program with further inflationary restraints is expected in the fall. More important, perhaps, they observe that the current market decline has come on a low volume of trading, so wide fluctuations are not so damaging as they might be at other times.

Departure From Tradition

The Bank of France, in a departure from long-standing tradition, has intervened little in recent weeks and seems to be generally leaving it up to the market to set a floor. The bank is confident that dealers will ease pressure when they realize that they can't be quite so sure of ultimate support, the experts said. Today, however, the central bank did intervene as the franc's decline against the powerful mark accelerated.

"There has clearly been a change of policy, and if you wanted to experiment with new tactics of leaving the market to itself, there couldn't be a better time," one foreign official commented. "Then, if it's decided to make some corrections later, it won't be too expensive because the volume is so low."

For many years, France has been the leading proponent of fixed international exchange rates, based on gold.

Although there is still occasional talk of the need to return to the gold standard, more from politicians than from economists, the decline in the gold price with its heavy impact on French re-

July Trade Deficit Is Britain's 2d Worst

LONDON, Aug. 13 (AP)—Exports slumped and imports soared in July to give Britain its second worst trade deficit in history, $943.2 million, the government announced today.

The bad trade news had been widely expected in financial circles here but the pound edged lower despite support buying by the Bank of England.

The shock of the huge deficit was partially offset, however, by the Government's announcement that inflation eased further in July. Retail prices rose only 0.2 percent, the Department of Employment announced, to 12.9 percent above the level of July 1975. Prices were up 13.8 percent in June.

The July trade deficit compared to one of $655.2 million in June. The record was in November 1974 with a deficit of $986.4 million.

The Department of Trade said British exports dropped $147.6 million last month to $3.5 billion, while imports jumped $142.2 million to $4.5 billion. The deficit in so-called "visible trade" was offset partially by "invisible earnings" of $234 million from tourism, freight, banking and insurance, the department said.

Oil Equipment Purchased

The Government attributed part of the deficit to the purchase of equipment for North Sea oil fields. This was put at $198 million.

Britain has been forced to borrow heavily overseas to finance its continuing trade deficit, which has lasted nearly five years and increased sharply with the jump in the cost of imported oil in 1973.

The Government and state-owned industry borrowed $13 billion abroad during 1974 and 1975 and the first three months of 1976. In June, the United States and nine other industrialized countries set up a $5 billion short-term credit on which the British Government can draw to support the pound.

Trade Surplus for Japan

TOKYO, Aug. 13 (UPI)—Japan had a trade surplus of $299 million in July and a steady expansion of both exports and imports, the Finance Ministry reported today.

The United States was the largest customer for Japanese goods, buying $1.46 billion, or 24.6 percent, of the total exports, the ministry said.

It added that exports on a customs-clearance basis in July totaled $5.93 billion, up 23.6 percent over the same month of last year while imports registered a yearly rise of 12.8 percent to total $5.63 billion. It was the sixth consecutive monthly rise for the exports and imports, the ministry said.

Apparently because of the domestic situation in China, Japan's sales to that country declined notably—44 percent from the year-ago level, the ministry said.

It added that imports from Southeast Asian countries were substantial, with those from Malaysia increasing by 99.2 percent over a year ago. Purchases from Thailand rose 83.7 percent while those from Hong Kong and South Korea increased 69.8 percent and 49.2 percent, respectively.

The ministry said imports of industrial raw materials and fuel accounted for 71.7 percent of the monthly total.

CENTRAL BANKS ACT TO AID FLOAT

Intervention on Continent Massive as Strong Mark Strains the Ceiling

FRENCH SUPPORT FRANC

British Back Pound Heavily —Dollar Falls to 4-Month Low Against the Mark

LONDON, Aug. 13 (AP)—Continental central banks intervened massively in money markets today to prevent the joint European float from breaking up as the strong West German mark strained the ceiling. The dollar was at a four-month low against the mark but mixed against other currencies.

And after Britain's Department of trade disclosed that the nation's July trade deficit of $943.2 million was the second largest for any month on record, the Bank of England had to give the pound heavy support, a dealer said. The pound fell to $1.7813 from $1.78[illegible] yesterday.

The Bank of France also supported its ailing currency which left the float in March although the amount was not thought to be very large. Some reports said that support reached $200 million, but others put the figue at $25-$50 million.

A 12.7 Percent Discount

After trading in the morning well below 20 cents, the franc gained against the dollar to end at almost 19.99 cents, down only slightly from yesterday. The franc ended at a 12.7 percent discount from its formal parity with the West German mark. If a realignment of the existing float curencies should take place, some observers believe the French franc will rejoin the currency bloc at a discount of possibly around [illegible] percent.

A dealer said the announcement of a $341.4 million seasonally adjusted French trade deficit in July had been anticipated even though this represented a sharp increase from the $20.8 million deficit in June.

In one of the most agitated foreign exchange trading days in many months, the dollar fell very sharply against the Japanese yen to the lowest level since June 1975. A late rate was 291 yen, down from 2[illegible] yesterday with some transactions reported at 290.75.

Pressure Builds Up

Trading started today with pronounced movement of funds into West German marks and Swiss franc on speculation that the currencies in the float would be realigned over the weekend. Despite Government statements in Brussels, Bonn and Frankfurt that a realignment was planned and that no meeting of monetary official had been scheduled for the weekend, pressure on the float built up throughout the day.

The dollar fell to 2.53[illegible] marks, the lowest level since July 1975 and down from 2.5425 yesterday. It also declined against the Swiss franc to 2.4880 from 2.4953.

Gold was steady in London at $113.20—.70 an ounce compared with $113.00—[illegible] yesterday. The afternoon fixing in Frankfurt was $113 dollars an ounce compared

Mannequins From History Speak

By STACY V. JONES
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13—The Mormon Church is staging "speaking mannequins" at various points in the United States, including visitors' centers in New York City and a suburb of Washington. In their appearance and recorded speech they represent various prsonalities, ranging from Joseph Smith (founder of the church) to a small boy.

Patents of the Week

Patent 3,973,840 was granted for the mannequin this week to G. Richard Jacobs, Cluff Peck and Dean G. Sodetquist, technicians in the public communications department of the church at Salt Lake City. The patent is assigned to the Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints.

The mannequin has a head, neck and torso. A sound motion picture helps represent a speaking person with changing facial expressions. A film held in a removable cassette may be automatically rewound for repetition of the speech, or it may be replaced by another with different sound effects. One mannequin can successively represent two or more persons.

Potato Default Unpaid; Exchange in Legal Snar

By ELIZABETH M. FOWLER

The long and the short of the dramatic story of the Maine potato default on the New York Mercantile Exchange is that so far no money has changed hands from the shorts to the longs, despite an exchange decree of last mnth to do so. The default took place in May.

Since then the exchange, as kind of an arbiter, has become enmeshed in legal technicalties.

First, the exchange decreed that the shorts who had sold Maine potatoes through the May contract but had failed to deliver any should pay the longs (who had bought potatoes but had received none) 1.96 cents a pound, or $980 a contract. Each contract covers 50,000 pounds of Maine potatoes.

The default involved 1,000 contracts, or a total of $980,000. The contracts were mostly sold by two millionaire Western potato experts—J. R. Simplot, who operates in Idaho, and P. J. Taggares, who operates in the state of Washington. About 35 longs are involved. These are individuals and some companies that use potatoes.

The decreed payment was based on the difference between what the exchange called the "fair market value" of 10.66 cents a pound and the final price quotation on the final trading day, May 7, of 8.7 cents a pound, or 1.96 cents.

Second, an exchange committee decreed that the shorts who failed to deliver should pay a penalty of 5.33 cents a pound, or a total of $2,6[illegible] a contract making $2.67 million in penalties, which would go to the exchange. The exchange deals only with [illegible] member firms, so the third member firms that are involved presumably would make the payment and collect it from the shorts.

At this point the shorts are apparently balking, not much at the 1.96 cents a pound due to the longs as at the total amount they must pay. They are threatening to enjoin the Mercantile Exchange from forcing the payment.

At the same time the exchange has asked the Commodity Futures Trading Commission to approve a new and narrower form of release that wants the longs to sign when the payment of 1.96 cents a pound is made.

It seems that the commission threw out the first release the exchange submitted as too broad. The first release would have relieved the exchange and its members of much legal responsibility.

The exchange is reported to be hoping to obtain commission approval for a second form of release next week. Then if the shorts try to enjoin payment the exchange will fight in court to have the injunction lifted. At such a point, several weeks in the future, the longs may receive their 1.96 cents.

Corporation Affairs

Perini Opening Inquiries Into 'Possible' Payments

The Perini Corporation said in a report filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission that it had retained a law firm to investigate "possible illegal, questionable or sensitive payments which may have been made" by or on behalf of the company or its affiliates.

The Framingham, Mass., construction company did not say in the report what had prompted the investigation. It declined to elaborate on the report. The investigation, the report noted, will be conducted by the law firm of Jacobs, Persinger & Parker, in which one of Perini's directors, Marshall A. Jacobs, is a partner. The company said, however, that Mr. Jacobs was not actively participating in the investigation.

Neptune Subsidiary Gets Study Contract

The Neptune International Corporation announced that its Nichols Engineering & Research Corporation subsidiary had been awarded a contract by the Interstate Sanitation Commission to study procedures for disposal of wastewater sludge in the Metropolitan New York-New Jersey area.

The amount of the contract, which is funded under the Environmental Protection Agency, was not disclosed. It calls for Nichols to conduct a pilot plant study of disposal methods.

Tidewater Split

Shareholders of Tidewater Marine Services Inc. at yesterday's annual meeting in New Orleans approved a doubling of the authorized common shares to 20 million, paving the way for a two-for-one split of the common stock, effective Sept. 1. The company said the dividend would be 10 cents a share quarterly on the split stock, compared with 20 cents a share on presplit shares. Shareholders were told that the increase in authorized stock would also provide flexibility in arranging financing or making acquisitions.

Portland Electric In Credit Accord

The Portland General Electric Company of Portland, Ore., announced the signing of a $40 million, two year revolving Eurodollar credit agreement that allows the utility to borrow at variable interest rates from a group of predominantly European banks.

Robert H. Short, the company's executive vice president, noted that the agreement added to the company's financing flexibility and also allowed it to take advantage of differentials in domestic and foreign interest rates. He said that recent differences in interest rate had made borrowing in the Eurodollar market attractive and emphasized that tapping this resource represented a supplement to, not a replacement of, domestic bank credit lines.

Bayerische Vereinbank, West Germany, and Credit Suisse White Weld, London, acted as co-managers in forming the banking syndicate.

Marathon Gets $11 Million Order

The Marathon Manufacturing Company of Houston announced receipt of two contracts worth $11 million from the Reading & Bates Exploration Company and J. Ray McDermott & Company. The Reading & Bates order is for a 300-foot-long supertender with the capability of erecting its own derrick for offshore drilling operations. The vessel is scheduled for delivery in April 1977. The second order calls for modification of an ocean-going barge.

Foreign Loans For Seoul Plant

The Pohang Iron & Steel Company of Seoul has received authorization by the South Korean Government to obtain foreign loans totaling $125 million to expand a steel-making facility at Pohang, 200 miles southeast of Seoul. The expansion will double the state-owned company's annual production capacity to 5.5 million tons of crude steel by 1979.

The loans include $77.3 million from Mitsui Bussan, a unit of Japan's Mitsui group; $25 million from British banks, chiefly Lazard Brothers; $15.8 million from Tokyo Menka Kaisha Ltd. of Japan, and $7.4 million from Banque de l'Indochine et de Suez and two other French banks.

Palosein for Dogs

Diagnostic Data Inc. in Mountain View, Calif., announced that its anti-inflammatory drug, Palosein, currently marketed for treatment of inflammation in horses, has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration for similar conditions in dogs. The pharmaceutical research and development company said that marketing of the drug for treatment of dogs would begin immediately.

B.P. Drops Irish Well

The British Petroleum Company announced it had abandoned its first Irish offshore well, which had been drilled in the Fastnet Rock basin 100 miles south of Cork. Besides B.P., the exploration group included Petroleum Development Ltd.; Aran Energy Ltd.; Shenandoah Ireland Inc. and Saga Ireland Ltd.

Carpenter Sets Expenditure Plan

The Carpenter Technology Corporation, a specialty steel producer of Reading, Pa., announced that it was undertaking a $130 million, five-year capital expenditure program to increase production capability. H. O. Beaver Jr., president, said that the cost was more than twice that of any previous five-year program by the company.

He noted that the program had been initiated although the specialty steel industry was currently operating at less than capacity. A major first phase of the program will be a $50 million, two-year improvement of the company's melting and finishing operations, much of it with equipment incorporating new technology.

Rockwell Contract

The Rockwell International Corporation was awarded two contracts by the Air Force totaling $15.9 million for high-altitude optics development work and for special test equipment related to the B-1 bomber program.

Oil-Related Stocks Defy the Charts

By VARTANIG G. VARTAN

A technical analyst on Wall Street recalled yesterday that some time ago he considered selling short the stocks of several companies in the oil-field equipment and service industry. He is a man who lives by his stock charts and ignores fundamental developments in companies.

"I looked at my charts and I thought that group was finished," he said. "But it's a good thing I didn't decide to short those stocks."

A good thing, indeed. While the stock market lately has turned in a rather listless performance, numerous issues associated with oil and gas exploration and servicing have performed rather handsomely.

Last Wednesday, for example, the Dow industrial average dropped more than 6½ points. But several issues of the specialty oil-related group reached their highest prices of 1976 on that day.

Among the stocks marking new highs were Halliburton, Parker Drilling, Schlumberger and Smith International.

This is a group, notes R. Gamble Baldwin of the First Boston Corporation, that typically moves with the apparent fate of the oil industry. Thus, these stocks can be affected for better or worse by developments—such as politics or taxes or threats—that affect the oil and gas companies. After all, those companies are the source of their business.

At least two key developments, Mr. Baldwin adds, have recently aided sellers of equipment and services.

The Federal Power Commission has raised the ceiling price of "new" natural gas and, although this action faces a court challenge, there is an overriding belief in Wall Street that natural gas prices ultimately are headed higher.

Secondly, a bill extending the life of the Federal Energy Administration and allowing more generous pricing on oil, particularly for low-producing wells, has passed Congress and awaits the signature of President Ford.

Enactment of this legislation is expected to add several billion dollars annually to oil companies' revenues, and a good part of this money would flow to the suppliers of oil-field equipment and services.

Typically, new gas is from deep wells, and deep drilling, in turn, means a greater use of bits and pipe and power on rigs, as well as heavier equipment.

Parker Drilling specializes in drilling deep wells. Halliburton's business includes cementing and well completion. Smith International produces drill bits. Schlumberger is the dominant factor in wireline services, or use of electronic data to identify the physical properties of a well.

These companies, of course, also provide other services and equipment. Moreover, the industry includes many other companies, such as Hughes Tool and Dresser Industries.

John H. Hayward Jr. of White, Weld points to other fundamental factors working in favor of the equipment and service concerns.

"The oil industry, thanks to higher prices for oil, now can best find its return on incremental investment on the production side," he says. "This is known as the upstream side of the business, as contrasted with the downstream side that covers transportation, refining and marketing."

The conclusion, therefore, is that a number of developments that were not reflected on the technical analyst's charts appear to have worked in favor of Halliburton, Schlumberger, Parker Drilling, Smith International and others in their field.

Furthermore, Mr. Hayward believes that while this group will produce earnings gains in 1976 on the order of perhaps 15 to 20 percent—or less than the profit advance for corporations generally this year—the tables will turn in 1977 as the oil-service group does better than the average company in other industries.

Kenneth Miller of Smith Barney, Harris Upham expects the cash flow of domestic oil producers to increase strongly in 1977 with a resultant 20 percent gain in spending for exploration, development and production.

He estimates Halliburton's earnings at $4.85 a share this year and $5.65 next year. Profits ran $3.84 in 1975. Mr. Miller recently recommended the purchase of Halliburton to institutional clients, although he has kind words also for other companies in the group.

For Smith International, Mr. Miller projects earnings this year at $4.45 and next year at $5.25, compared with $4.06 in 1975. His estimate for Baker International, another manufacturer of drill bits, is $3.60 in fiscal 1976 and $4.35 the following year, against last year's $3.43.

Fear of Inflation Is Key to Franc's Fall

serves has been a disincentive for Paris to practice what it preaches.

It cost the Bank of France nearly $1 billion to try to peg the franc early this year. In March it finally gave up as France withdrew "temporarily" from the joint float that held most major European currencies within 2.25 percent of each other against the fluctuating dollar. The franc was allowed to find its own rate, like the pound and lira.

Occasional Interventions

Nonetheless, the franc wasn't turned entirely loose, and dealers could still count on occasional interventions by the Bank of France to prevent erratic movements.

That policy seems to have been almost abandoned for the time being. Instead, the bank raised its discount rate from 8 to 9½ percent last month, and short-term money rates rose quickly. By making speculation more costly, the move has an influence on exchange rates. But it also reversed the effort to encourage expansion in business and employment by making borrowing more expensive.

The competitive element in letting money devalue, however, is no longer considered the automatic advantage that it once seemed to be. It does make export prices cheaper. But that helps the balance of payments only if the markets are there, ready to buy French goods instead of German or American, for example.

Markets Saturated

The analysts here now tend to consider that France has fairly well saturated its markets, and would have to invest the time and effort in finding new buyers before it could benefit substantially from sales resulting from a cheaper franc.

In the meantime, import costs rise automatically and immediately when a currency loses value, whether by official devaluation or free-market pressure.

French officials have calculated that a drop of 1 percent in the franc's rate costs the economy 500 million francs in a year (which would have been worth about $111 million to France at the beginning of the year, but is now only $100 million).

Last year's dramatic trade surplus of $2.1 billion, a turnaround from a deficit of $3.9 billion in 1974, is attributed almost entirely to a drop in imports during the recession. There was no significant rise in exports. Now that imports are climbing again, a $2 billion trade deficit is projected for 1976.

Therefore, the franc's weakness is winning no public applause here — since there is little reason to expect that it will help expand business and jobs with a big new burst of exports.

The economic effects of this summer's drought, still impossible to measure but almost certain to increase the need for imports and diminish available exports, are another substantial factor in undermining prospects for the franc.

Domestic political queasiness, speculation that the mark will be revalued upward if not before West Germany's Oct. 3 elections then soon thereafter, troubles in Italy, which is an important French customer, fear about the value of reserves now that gold has fallen back to nearly half its highest price, are all given as other reasons for the franc's current difficulties.

Seen as Prime Cause

But the basic, underlying issue of economic performance and control of inflation has come increasingly to be seen as the prime cause of poor monetary performance, in day-by-day market trading as well as in the longer term.

The argument that dominated relations among leaders of the European Economic Community just a few years ago about whether they should concentrate on agreements about the exchange rate of their currencies or on trying to coordinate their economic policies is dead now. It is accepted by all that there isn't a chicken and egg question of whether money or the economy comes first, as France insisted in the days of the late President Georges Pompidou.

The economy is clearly perceived as the root of it all, and the prime influence on the economy these days is seen as the price-wage spiral, in effect, social-political relations.

It is what West Germany's Chancellor, Helmut Schmidt, has been saying all along, and French commentators haven't minded pointing out recently that there is nothing more irritating than somebody who's been right all along, and says so.

President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing, in recognition of the basic principle, has quietly stopped proclaiming the goal of catching up with West Germany's economic output, and has been lecuring his people instead on the need to try to match Germany's economic discipline.

Quite Another Matter

That is quite another matter and means settling for slower growth, which in turn means trying to find some way to cope with the fact that social politics in France are a great deal more antagonistic and intractable than in West Germany.

Beyond that theoretical truism, there is no clear sign yet of what the Government intends to do in the squeeze between inflation, unemployment and the subsiding franc. There is a psychological, strictly noneconomic but, nonetheless, political impact of proud Frenchmen seeing their money drop on the world market, which also has to be taken into account.

Meanwhile, the experts are fairly calm about the franc's short-term prospects, neither expecting it to strengthen much below the 20-cent level, nor to plummet much further as the pound and the lira have done this year.

It is recognized now that exchange policy isn't the key to the future, and it may be that the Bank of France is moving away from constant intervention in order to free the Government — politically as well as economically — to face the issues of domestic economic policy more directly.

Joint Aid Plea Made in Britain

Timothy C. Leader, managing director of Babcock & Wilcox Ltd. of London, said yesterday that he and trade union leaders were making a joint appeal to the Government for financial aid for manufacturers of power station equipment. "Time is running out," he said in a London radio interview.

No contracts for conventional or nuclear power plants have been placed with British companies since 1973 and four more lean years are expected.

B. & W., whose plant employs 10,000 workers, has asked for a temporary payroll subsidy. The Government has offered cash payments—about $40 a week per employee — to companies with bright prospects whose current operations are slack. It is not known whether the Government will consider the present hardships of the power plant manufacturers temporary. In all they employ about 50,000 workers.

Carlos A. Basaldua, who most recently has been running a public relations agency in London, has been named director of New York State's European office in London. Mr. Basaldua, who is 44 years old, was named to the office by John S. Dyson, New York State Commerce Commissioner. The position pays $30,000 a year.

The office itself, previously in Brussels, was established to help seek increased export sales for New York State manufacturers as well as extol the advantages of the state to European businessmen considering establishing facilities in the United States.

Theodor Schmidt-Scheuber, president of ABD Securities, has been nominated to be chairman of the Boston Stock Exchange. He has been vice chairman since 1971 and is expected to be elected to the chairman's office at a membership meeting of the exchange on Sept. 27. ABD Securities is a New York-based brokerage firm owned by a group of European banks.

Victor M. Zink, employee benefits director for the General Motors Corporation, was named by President Ford yesterday to the advisory committee of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation for the term expiring Feb. 19, 1978. He succeeds Kenneth L. Houck, who resigned last February. The seven-member panel, established in 1974, advises the corporation on trustee appointment policies and procedures, investments and potential liquidations.

5 IMPORTED CARS TO RAISE PRICES

Antidumping Case Is Settled by Agreement With U.S.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (AP) —Five manufacturers of foreign automobiles have agreed to raise their prices in the United States in response to findings that they were selling cars in this country more cheaply than at home, the Treasury Department announced today. The action will mean higher prices for American buyers of imported cars made by Volkswagen, Volvo, Saab, Renault and Ford of West Germany, which makes Capris.

The Treasury Department declined to say how much the manufacturers would raise prices or for which models, explaining that such matters were trade secrets.

The action brings to a close the largest antidumping case ever undertaken by the United States Government. The investigation started last year under prodding by the United Auto Workers, involved $7.4 billion worth of imported cars.

The investigation covered 28 manufacturers in eight foreign countries: West Germany, Britain, France, Belgium, Italy, Sweden, Japan and Canada.

Complaint Voiced

The auto workers' union had complained that foreign cars were being dumped (sold in the United States at lower prices than in the home market) and were thus competing unfairly with domestic automobiles. United States auto makers, whose subsidiaries in Canada and Europe were included in the investigation, took no stand on the issue.

The Treasury Department took the first step toward defusing the issue in May when it announced that dumping existed but that it would seek a negotiated solution instead of imposing compensatory duties.

By that time the share of auto sales in the United States accounted for by imports had slipped. The European Common Market was hinting at retaliation if the United States invoked extra duties. And Volkswagen indicated that an adverse decision by the Treasury Department could scrap its plans for opening a VW assembly plant in western Pennsylvania.

The Treasury Department initially found that only five manufacturers—Honda, Nissan and Toyota of Japan, Porsche of West Germany and Rolls-Royce of Britain were not dumping. But, after adjusting sales figures to account for currency variations and differences in the equipment of cars made for the United States and other markets, the Treasury Department decided that only five manufacturers needed to raise prices. Now these five have agreed to do so.

Canadian Deficit Declines

OTTAWA, Aug. 13 (Reuters) —Canada's budget deficit fell to $60 million in June, compared with $188 million in May, the Department of Finance said today. In June last year, the budget deficit was $32 million. In the first quarter of the fiscal year ended June 30 the deficit was $2.28 million. Revenues were $7.14 million and expenditures were $9.41 million.

POTATO DEFAULT REMAINS UNPAID

Meanwhile, some of the longs apparently have withheld payments they owe some Maine potato farmers. It is known that some longs bought a large number of potatoes either to force prices higher or in the hope that the shorts would have to buy from them to make delivery.

The longs owe the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad about $180,000, the National Organization in Iowa about $400,000 and possibly individual farmers or farm groups in Maine $1.5 million, according to testimony received by the office of Senator Edmund Muskie, Democrat of Maine. The longs apparently contend that they cannot pay until the shorts pay them.

One trader at the Mercantile Exchange commented, "The longs may get their money from the shorts by the time the first frost sets in in Maine this fall."

Where it will all end, or how soon, no one knows because of the legal snurl. Suits have also been filed against the shorts and the exchange by unhappy futures traders. It now looks as if the only real winners will be the lawyers who are grappling with the legal technicalities involving the biggest default in commodity futures history.

Cornfeld Held Guilty In Use of 'Blue Box' For Overseas Calls

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 13 (Reuters) — Bernard Cornfeld was found guilty today by a Federal jury of using an illegal electronic device called a "blue box" to make free long-distance telephone calls. He faces up to 15 years' imprisonment.

A blux box is a device designed to generate tones and signals similar to those used by the telephone company in routing calls.

After deliberating one day, a United States District Court jury found the international financier guilty on all three charges of defrauding the telephone company.

Mr. Cornfeld, 47 years old, who once served as head of the defunct Investors Overseas Services, a multimillion-dollar mutual-funds empire in Europe, pleaded not guilty.

Federal District Judge Matthew Byrne set Sept. 27 for sentencing. Mr. Confeld refused to comment outside the court beyond saying he would appeal the conviction.

During the trial two of his former secretaries testified that they were responsible for using the blue boxes and that Mr. Cornfeld knew nothing about them.

The devices were seized in a raid on Mr. Cornfeld's luxurious 40-room Beverly Hills mansion on Jan. 28 last year.

At the time of the raid one of Mr. Cornfeld's secretaries was arrested and accused of using the devices, but later the charges against her were dropped and a Federal grand jury indicted the financier himself.

REPORT SUBMITTED IN BERNHARD CASE

THE HAGUE, Aug. 13 (Reuters)—A three-man commission of inquiry, set up by the Government to investigate allegations that Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands received large bribes from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, has reported its findings to Prime Minister Joop den Uyl.

A brief statement by the commission gave no indication of its contents.

A Government spokesman said the report would not be published until the Dutch Government received permission from the United States Justice Department to make known some of the details.

Prince Bernhard, 65-year-old husband of Queen Juliana and Inspector General of the Dutch armed forces, has denied receiving any money from Lockheed.

Mr. Den Uyl appointed the commission after the Government concluded that Prince Bernhard was the high Dutch Government official alleged by the former Lockheed president, Carl Kotchian, to have received $1.1 million to promote aircraft sales.

New-Car Sales Climbed 48.4% To Record in the Aug. 1-10 Span

since the Dec. 1-10 period of 1973 that the industry had set a 10-day selling record.

While sales in 1976 have rebounded from the depressed 1974-75 levels, the industry has not broken any monthly sales records.

Sales were actually off 14 percent in August from July. That drop, however, was less than the usual decline of 26 percent.

As a result, the annual selling rate climbed to the 10 million level in August from July's 8.7 million pace.

One analyst maintained that the selling contests at G. M. were the chief reason for the sales spurt but he added: "It will take another 10-day period to make sure this analysis is right."

Analysts said growing shortages of some models would hold down sales. They noted there was only a 21-day supply of the Oldsmobile Cutlass, the country's best-selling car. The industry headed into August with a less-than-normal 51-day inventory.

An analysis of the Aug. 1-10 sales by Ward's Automotive Reports, the industry's statistical service, showed that intermediate cars accounted for 32.49 percent of the business, full-sized cars 22.9 percent, vans 1.5 percent, compacts 25.76 percent and subcompacts 17.35 percent.

Full-sized cars' share dropped from what they have been getting this year while the share of subcompacts increased.

An analyst explained that "small cars normally pick up and full-sized cars usually lose their share at this time of the year, but that it is magnified now by the high stocks of small cars and the very low supplies of the hot-selling big cars."

The Chrysler Corporation reported the biggest sales gain of the four manufacturers this month, a 74 percent increase. The Ford Motor Company reported a 9.9 percent gain in sales. But the American Motors Corporation continued to report declining sales. Its deliveries were off 29 percent.

A.M.C.'s market share dropped to 2.4 percent from 5 percent last year. Chrysler's was still at a low 13.4 percent, but this was up from 11.4 percent last year. Ford's was down to 22 percent from 29.8 percent while G. M.'s 62.6 percent share was up from 53.8 percent. It was the first time G. M.'s share had surpassed the 60 percent level since it accounted for 60.1 percent in July, 1975.

Sizing up the market, Alex C. Mair, general manager of G. M.'s Pontiac division, said that, "we could sell more regular-sized cars if we had them. We have less than a 30-day supply left."

He said production of the new models "is starting very well—less than the normal problems for all new cars."

Mr. Mair said dealer orders for the new models were stronger than expected and he forecast Pontiac would sell a record 900,000 cars in the 1977 model year, up 28 percent from the 705,000 total for the 1976 model year. Sales this year are up 53 percent from the 1975 total of 465,000. The record at Pontiac is 865,000 cars in 1973.

"We expect half our sales gain to be the new smaller regular-size cars," he said.

Bennett E. Bidwell, sales group vice president of Ford, said, "sales are maintaining a strong pace through the summer months. During the next two months we expect to see a sharp selloff of 1976 models and an excellent introduction of 1977 models."

lion shares from 15.56 million shares on Thursday.

John R. Reese, vice president and a director of Wood, Struthers & Winthrop Inc., said the stock market yesterday continued "in its summer doldrums, unable to develop any real direction."

Mr. Reese said that investors remained concerned about the sustainability of the economic recovery, the containment of inflationary pressures and the direction of interest rates. They are also troubled by uncertainty regarding the outcome of the Presidential election, he said.

Vetco Moves Lower

One of the bigger losers yesterday was Vetco Offshore Industries, which fell 1¾ points to 18½. The drilling company reported that its first-quarter profits would be "significantly" below the 97 cents a share netted last year.

Signal Companies was lower throughout the session and closed down ¾ points at 21⅛. The weakness followed the announcement late Thursday that Dresser Industries had withdrawn its offer to acquire Signal. Dresser rose ¼ to 44⅝.

In another merger development, U. S. Fidelity and Guaranty said it was holding preliminary discussions to acquire the Richmond Corporation. Richmond gained 1⅝ and closed at its 1976 high of 21⅛. U. S. Fidelity lost ¾ to 44¾.

Richmond is a holding company that owns the Life Insurance Company of Virginia. It has been fighting the Continental Group's offer to buy it for an exchange of stock worth more than $250 million.

Another depressed issue was United Nuclear, which tumbled 1⅜ points to 34½. Earlier this week the company announced that its earnings for the fiscal second quarter ended Sept. 30 were expected to exceed the 73 cents earned in the fiscal first quarter.

Elgin National Industries advanced 1¾ to 38¾ after reporting that its operating net in the second quarter climbed to $2.34 a share from 14 cents a share in the like period in 1975.

Two of the auto producers' stocks advanced after reporting substantial gains in early August sales. They were General Motors, which added ⅝ to 67¾ and Chrysler, ⅜ to 21½. Meanwhile, Ford declined ¼ to 56¼ after announcing only small increases in its car sales for the same period.

The most actively traded stock was Dow Chemical, which fell ⅜ to 44⅞ on a turnover of 178,400 shares. There was no corporate news to account for the activity in the stock.

The Sony Corporation, the third most heavily traded stock, was unchanged at 9½. The company said it was planning to add two and three-hour tapes for its video tape recorders and players.

The Fibreboard Corporation, which lost 1⅞ on Thursday, rose ½ to 11¾. The company said that resolution of civil antitrust litigation against it was not immiment. The civil actions follow a Grand Jury indictment earlier this year against the company, alleging antitrust violations in the folding-carton industry.

Approval by stockholders of Tidewater Marine of a previously proposed 2-for-1 split helped the stock gain ⅝ to 37⅜.

ZAIRE SUIT IS FILED BY BANKERS TRUST

The Bankers Trust Company said yesterday that it had filed suit in Federal District Court in New York against the United States Export-Import Bank and the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company over a proposed Zaire payment facility.

Last week Citibank said that it too was suing the Federal agency on charges of attempting to set up a preferential repayment mechanism for some of its loans to the African country.

Bankers Trust said that this arrangement, by which some of the proceeds from sales of copper in Europe would be paid directly to the Export-Import Bank, violated agreements between Zaire and two groups of commercial bank lenders for which Bankers Trust is agent, to the effect that their loans would not be subordinated to any other loans.

One of the bank groups loaned $25 million to Zaire in 1970 and the other loaned $25 million to Air Zaire in 1972, with a guarantee by the Zaire Government. Both loans are separate from the $50 million loan to Zaire in 1972 that formed the basis of the Citibank suit.

The American Stock Exchange said yesterday it had asked for authority to begin options trading in the MGIC Investment Corporation. This would bring to 59 the number of options traded on the Amex.

Conrail Gets $23.4 Million Grant

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Transportation Department awarded Conrail a $23.4 million grant today to enable the railroad to operate passenger service in the Northwest Corridor and Great Lakes region. The grant is intended to cover part of the deficit expected from operating rail passenger service in the regions. It will cover six months of operations.

Robert Patricelli, administrator of the Department's Urban Mass Transportation Administration, said the grant "insures continuing commuter rail service formerly operated by the bankrupt Penn Central Railroad, Erie Lackawanna, Reading and Central Railroad of New Jersey." Those railroads are four of the six that were merged into Conrail earlier this year.

OPEC Sets Parley for Aug. 23

VIENNA, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries announced today that its economic commission would open a meeting here Aug. 23. No details of the agenda were disclosed, but discussions of the economic commission usually center on the price of oil.

The organization's headquarters said two subcommittees had been meeting in the last four days to prepare reports for the commission, which in turn was expected to report its findings to the group's oil ministers scheduled to meet in Qatar on December 15.

Saudi Arabia's Oil Minister, Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani, said in Geneva Monday that there had been demands to hold an extraordinary session of the oil ministers to increase the oil price before the Qatar meeting. But he added, "I do not think we will ever be in a position to accept that." He said he thought the oil price would be increased for 1977, but he also said Saudi Arabia—the group's biggest producer—would resist any "drastic increase."

Textile Inventor in Rift With du Pont

application of its own, filed in 1957 was essentially the same as Mr. Bloch's later patent.

Legal claims and counterclaims in the Federal courts ensued, involving the Patent Office as well as Mr. Bloch and Du Pont.

Mr. Bloch's idea was based on a simple principle. If a strand of yarn with a degree of shringage or dimensional stability is put together with another strand of yarn with a different degree of shrinkage and the two are subjected to hot water or heat, they will shrink to different sizes forcing the yarns to bulk out. This gives the yarn a softer feeling.

Actions by Courts

The DuPont claim was based on a patent application in 1957 by Benjamin Chiatse Sze, an employee, who had assigned it to DuPont. Mr. Sze's original patent application was for bulking through shrinkage of a yarn made up of two sets of filaments, one a single component and the other a bi-component (a yarn of two different fibers). When subjected to hot water, the bi-component formed a helix, or coil, which created the bulk.

In 1972, DuPont asked the Federal Court in the District of Columbia, to compel the Patent Commissioner to recognize the 1957 application as covering the bulking of single strands as well as the bulking of bi-component yarn.

The suit sought an "interference" with Mr. Bloch's patent, and the judge ruled in DuPont's favor, allowing the company to include the claim, identical to Mr. Bloch's, in Mr. Sze's patent application. Earlier the Patent Office and Board of Appeals had rejected such a claim.

Relief Is Sought

Mr. Bloch then filed a suit seeking relief from the "interference" decision of the Federal Court, naming in addition to Mr. Sze and Du Pont the Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks, C. Marshall Dann. He reqested "relief" from what he termed was the administrative action of the Commissioner of Patents which allowed him to give only very limited testimony on the interference. He was not allowed to cross examine Du Pont's witnesses, he said. He also sought a reversal of the decision of Judge Matthew F. McGuire of the Federal Court.

The Patent Office, according to Mr. Bloch's brief, now seems prepared to award Du Pont "without doubt" a patent monopoly until 1944 on a process the Patent Examiners and Board of Appeal earlier ruled it had not invented.

"The law requires that for one party to take away the invention covered by a patent issued to another in these circumstances" Mr. Bloch said, "they must prove their right to claim the invention 'without doubt.' But great doubt was already injected by the early rulings of patent examiners and the Patent Office Board of Appeals that Du Pont could not claim the invention to have been made by them.

"Du Pont overcame this hurdle," he went on to say, "by presenting evidence in the District Court in Washington and obtained a ruling that they could make the claim 'without doubt.'"

"We did not know of this action against the Patent Office until afterward."

"It is on the record that we have charged that the testimony was deceptive and misleading. It is also on the record that the Board of Interference ruled originally that no evidence was to be heard, but this was modified by the Assistant Commissioner's intervention."

Mr. Bloch believes that the Commissioner of Patents himself did not handle the case because before going to the Patent Office, he had been the chief patent counsel for Du Pont.

A spokesman for Du Pont had this to say about the case:

"This matter dates back to December 1963 when Du Pont invoked the legal process known as interference or in other words, Du Pont claimed it had first invented the product in question. The United States Patent Office declared an interference (the proceeding in which the first inventor is determined) and there followed a lengthy procedure including appeals.

DuPont Victory Seen

"Ultimately, on Oct. 4, 1973, the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals ruled that DuPont was the first inventor of the product. The appeals procedure has been exhausted and issuance of the patent to DuPont is imminent.

"In a related case pertaining to the process, the Patent Office refused to DuPont an interference with Bloch's patent No. 3,175,351 in February 1969. On appeal, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia ordered that DuPont be put in interference in May 1972, and a parallel procedure was subsequently begun in the Patent Office where it is still pending. Based on the result of the product patent case, a ruling favorable to DuPont is expected."

The DuPont spokesman said that DuPont had paid Mr. Bloch royalties from 1969 to 1972 "to protect against the possibility that the courts might rule against them."

Mr. Bloch is waiting for the outcome to see if the patent is going to remain in his hands or will move into the DuPont bank of patents.

Mannequins That Speak Are Patented

The clothing's appearance can be changed with lights and mirrors.

The first of the mannequins, which were presented at the 1974 world exposition in Spokane, have now been retired. At a visitors' center in suburban Kensington, Md., is a mannequin representing Joseph Smith, who was killed by a mob in 1844. The face was created from a death mask, and the speech is based on his published answers to questions.

The Manhattan visitors' center displays a mannequin that undergoes facial and identity changes. In one role it is an ancient, pre-Indian resident of North America, and in another it is a pioneer making his way to Utah. A separate mannequin portrays a father talking to his family.

At the Salt Lake City center a mannequin appears as a small boy, also engaging in domestic conversation.

Electric 'Pipe Wire'

A Brooklyn professor has invented what he calls "pipe wire" for the distribution of alternating current throughout homes, offices and factories. Donald F. Othmer of the Polytechnic Institute of New York was granted a patent this week for a cable consisting of a steel tube and an insulated wire inside it.

Patent 3,974,398 is one of a related series. The three others (one of which is to be issued next week) cover Dr. Othmer's "pipe heat," which is already in use.

In the new invention a "skin," or thin layer of the inner surface of a steel tube about a quarter inch in diameter, serves as return conductor. The other side of the circuit is carried by the insulated wire.

For pipe heat Dr. Othmer and others have granted licenses to Pipe Heating Systems Inc. of Brecksville, Ohio, for the United States and Canada. A related company holds other licenses for a half dozen countries of Europe. Many miles of petroleum pipeline as large as 30 inches in diameter and smaller sizes for vegetable oils, resins and liquid sulfur are kept warm by the "skin effect" due to magnetic fields of electric current.

Dr. Othmer says his pipe wire will be cheaper and more durable than the standard armored cables.

A chemical engineer and holder of more than 100 United States patents, Dr. Othmer has been at Polytechnic since 1932 and has held the rank of distinguished professor since 1961.

Hearing Tester

Vernon O. Blackledge of Scottsdale, Ariz., was awarded Patent 3,974,335 this week for a system of testing hearing by telephone. When the patient calls a special number, by touch-tone or dialing, the equipment sounds tones at various levels and records what is heard with each ear. After the test is completed, the patient is given a code number and address and is told that if a fee is paid the results will be sent to him.

Earthworm Lure

An electric earthworm collector has a rod to be inserted in the ground, a handle and a conductor to be plugged into a household alternating-current outlet. A pulsating (but nonoscillating) current around the rod invites the worms to the surface.

Patent 3,973,354, which was granted this week to John Schommer of Tustin, Calif., provides another model that works with direct current from an automobile battery. Two parallel rods are pushed into the ground, and a plug is inserted into the socket normally used for the car's cigarette lighter.

To get a copy of a patent send the number and 50 cents to the Patent and Trademark Office, Washington, D. C. 20231. Design patents are 20 cents each.

Edward McGlade, who has been the village postmaster since 1965. Manhattan is 85 miles and about 95 driving minutes from Otisville.

According to Herbert Holley, a former postmaster, the village was named for Isaac Otis, who opened a general store here in 1816, later prospered in business in New York City and went on to become United States Ambassador to Spain.

"The prison could be a good thing for us," Mr. McGlade said, "if it provides jobs for our young people. It might help to keep some of them in the area. After all, the Federal Government does pay good. I've worked for them for 30 years and found it very rewarding."

Just how many local jobs will be created by the prison is unclear. "Anything will help," Mr. McGlade said. "There are a lot of people out of work around here."

The immediate benefit to the community should be construction jobs. "We had a lot of good carpenters and other workmen going all the way down to the city to find work until that dried up, too," said Marge Bonanto, a clerk in the Otisville post office. "But," she added, "we've got good unions here. They are going to have to hire local men on the prison job."

The facility, now known as the Otisville Rehabilitation Center, was the site of United States Army General Hospital No. 8 during and after World War I. In the 1920's, the Army turned it over to New York City for use as a tuberculosis sanitarium. The sanitarium closed in 1951. Four years later the state acquired the property and made it a correctional facility for juvenile delinquents.

45 Buildings

In 1972, it became a state drug-rehabilitation center. But budget cuts and changes in the methodology of drug rehabilitation forced the center to close last March.

The center consists of some 45 buildings, including dormitories, gymnasiums, schools, workshops and a dining hall. Few, if any, of the existing buildings will become part of the proposed Federal prison complex.

In fact, there is some question as to what will become of them. A week ago, the State Department of Mental Hygiene announced that they would be used to house inmates from Matteawan State Hospital for the Criminally Insane, which is being shut down.

But local residents insist that is not so. They say they have been told that the Federal Government plans to buy the entire property and use the former rehabilitation center as a halfway house for inmates soon to be released from Federal prisons.

According to the United States Bureau of Prisons, the fate of the rehabilitation center is still being negotiated.

Michael Hornbuckle, who operates Cinotti's Store on Main Street, said he thought the family hardware business would benefit most from the prison—at least during construction. "Doesn't matter how big the contractor is," he said. "He's always going to have a broken shovel."

William Wanser, who delivers fuel oil for the Stanfield Brothers Oil Company, has lived in Otisville since 1939.

"We put up with cars being stolen and windows being smashed when they had the juvenile delinquents up there," he said. "This seems like a better deal. Besides, it's tax-free land anyway. What have we got to lose?"

Linda Kidney, a secretary for Stanfield Brothers, said she had been worried about security. "But when they came here and showed us all the electronic sensors and stuff," she said, "I felt better."

Edward McGlade, the postmaster of Otisville, N.Y. "The prison could be a good thing for us," he said, "if it provides jobs for our young people. It might help keep some of them in the area."

MINORITIES ADVANCE IN BETTER U.S. JOBS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 12 (AP) — Minority group employees made gains in holding more higher graded, better paying Federal jobs in the year ended Nov. 30, 1975, the Civil Commission said today.

In a report on minority jobs, the commission said that minorities gained increases in middle and upper groupings of its general schedule and similar "white collar" pay plans.

Minority workers also registered net gains in supervisory and leader positions under "blue collar" wage systems, the report added.

It listed 2,419,520 full-time Federal employees. Total minority employment was put as 508,291, or 21 percent.

The number of full-time minority workers fell by 2,860 in the year ended last November, the report said, as overall Federal full-time employment decreased by 11,794 jobs.

The number of minority employees in the general schedule and similar pay plans increased by 4,217 to 238,508, or 17.3 percent, of Federal white collar employment.

The general schedule is a salary ranking based on job type for Federal workers under Civil Service.

In "blue collar" wage systems, minorities continued to gain in leader and supervisory jobs, the commission said, to 20.3 percent of such posts.

POMONA

for sale the likes of which you have not seen in this area. It is approx 20 miles from the heart of Manhattan. It consists of approx 20 acres of beautiful land—much of which is lawn, part of which is wooded. It is in a quiet section of the Foothills of Bear Mtn yet close enough to all of the main super highways to get anywhere in a matter of minutes. The home consists of 22 rooms with 7 bathrooms. It is a completely restored, charming, pre-Revolutionary War clay home which has had its style maintained but it's standards improved to the ultimate in conveniences. It includes a master bedroom suite, a formal dining room, sitting room, living rooms, den, a SUPER Rainskeller type bar, a therapeutic pool and sauna room, 4 marble bedrooms, and a suite for a maid. There are also 2 smaller homes on the property. One is a caretaker's home which is charming; another is a gardener's apt above the barn. There is a first-class clay tennis court on the property. The property has been designed to construct a short hole golf course on it. The plantings, shrubbery and trees are second to none. A stream runs through the property enriching into a quiet, small river, a portion of which is dammed, making a swimming hole on the property. Nestled against the rear and the Palisades Interstate Park are immediately accessible either by horseback, on foot, or in a jeep. There is a 3 car garage and barn. Immediately adjacent is a first-class horse back riding facility consisting of an indoor ring, outdoor ring, trails, hunt course and 95 box stalls. We own part too. And—if you want that, it is also for sale. Access the road is a small ski hill we recommend for a ride low. This is our property. It is being offered separately.

The estate is a bargain. You must see it to believe it. If you are interested, call us and come over. We will give you a tour of the property in the jeep or a golf cart. If you love tennis, horse back riding, short-hole golfing, hiking, or just plain wandering in the woods among the wonders of nature, you will love this property. The price is right.

DESIGNER CONCEPT

Noted architectural designer has created an extraordinary blend of house/land/privacy & convenience. The house is a new 1 floor contemporary built to Japanese scale of cruciy stucco inside & out w/exposed beams-glass walls, Liv rm w/open fireplace, 3 BR, 2 bth, sauna. It sprawls over rock croppings, overlooking its own brooks & a small pine-rimmed fishing, swimming, skating lake. It's on 3 acres w/pvt road, part of a 13 ac estate. There's one other house-the owner designer's a similar contemporary. His plan is to build only 2 more houses each on 3 acres all invisible from each other-all sharing the lake. It's all 5 min. from town & an easy 1½ hr drive to Manhattan. $154,000. owner, 203-792-1995 wknds; 212-279-0793 wkdys.

Health Department Expects to Begin Administering Influenza Vaccinations

By MORRIS KAPLAN

New York City's Health Department expects to start administering swine influenza vaccinations on Oct. 1 for six million of the estimated total of 10 million people who spend each day here, including commuters, illegal aliens and transients over the age of 24.

People over 65 years of age, diabetics and those with chronic illnesses, heart, kidney and lung diseases will be the first to be inoculated, according to Dr. Pascal J. Imperato, First Deputy Health Commissioner.

Dr. Imperato heads a task force which will determine later this month whether to proceed with the immunization of the 18-to-24 age group. The force is awaiting final recommendations of the United States Public Health advisory committee which will meet next week in Atlanta on the subject.

Dr. Imperato said that it was likely that the task force would endorse the advisory committee's findings, although local health departments can modify them.

New Jersey and Connecticut planned, meanwhile, to start immunizing next month everyone aged 18 and older. In Trenton, Governor Byrne cautioned that the state's financial difficulties might make it necessary to seek donations, unspecified, from the recipients of vaccine.

In New York, technicians will work in 45 immunization clinics, 20 of them in district health centers and 25 in the voluntary and municipal hospitals. They will employ 125 automatic jet injectors, each capable of giving up to 1,000 injections an hour.

In addition, 15 mobile teams will be deployed where there are large concentrations of people, as in the Wall Street area. Others will also receive their shots where they are employed, in such large industries or businesses as the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The vaccine is free, but private physicians may charge a fee.

Clinics here will be open from 9 A.M. to 5 P.M., daily and, possibly, on weekends, depending on the public's response.

Recipients Must Consent

Vaccine recipients will be required to sign uniform consent forms, advising them to expect possible adverse reactions, such as fever ranging from 100 to 104 degrees for several days, soreness in the arm and redness around the area where the vaccination was administered.

Dr. Imperato reported the organization of a surveillance system to deal with more severe reactions, providing telephone numbers to be called in each of the five boroughs. The entire city program would operate with a force of 250 persons, namely 160 Health Department employees and 90 others paid with Federal funds.

The total cost of the program here was estimated at $9.5 million, with $6.5 million borne by the Federal Government and the remainder by New York.

Under terms of the Federal legislation, private physicians would be covered by malpractice insurance only if they did not charge a fee for their immunization services.

Probably Have to Wait

A State Health Department official in Albany said that state residents would probably have to wait until early next month to start receiving inoculations. The shots would be available free at public health clinics.

In New Jersey, Dr. Joanne Finley, the State Health Commissioner, prepared to administer the vaccine to 6.4 million of the state's more than 9 million residents in 21 county depots. While the Federal Government has provided $731,000 for the program, New Jersey's cost, $750,000, led Governor Byrne to complain:

"We don't have the money."

In Connecticut, State Health Commissioner Dr. Douglas Lloyd, announced that regional offices for administering the shots would be set up in Torrington, Hartford, Mansfield, Wilton, Shelton and Norwich. He said he could not determine at this time how many of the state's 3,139,000 residents would be eligible under the program.

Repairs to Close Off Part Of Deegan Expressway

Because of repair work and resurfacing, the northbound lanes of The Major Deegan Expressway will be closed to all vehicular traffic starting Monday at 10 P.M.

The roadway will remain closed from Monday to Friday from 10 P.M. to 6:30 A.M., from West 167th Street to Van Cortlandt Park South. In case of any scheduled event at Yankee Stadium, the closings will be delayed until after the end of the event.

The directive on the closing said that motorists and trucks would be permitted access to the George Washington Bridge and the Cross Bronx Expressway. However, through vehicles will be detoured to Sedgwick Avenues beyond the construction site and will be permitted to re-enter the Major Deegan Expressway at Van Cortlandt Park South. The detour will remain in effect until the resurfacing has been completed.

Early Arrivals for V.F.W. Convention Buzz With Talk About 'Legion Disease'

By EDITH EVANS ASBURY

Members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars began arriving in New York City yesterday for their 77th national convention, which is expected to attract a total of 40,000 delegates, family members and friends next week. Those who showed up early were abuzz with talk of the so-called "Legion disease."

The mysterious illness that attacked the American Legion convention in Philadelphia recently not only did not keep delegates away from New York, but "it stirred a little more interest in the convention," according to the organization's national commander, Thomas Walker. He said new requests to attend had come in recently, although reservations had been closed a month ago.

"This is just another battle and we don't care about what happened in Philadelphia," Mr. Walker said. "We're tougher, we've been in battle," he asserted, referring to the fact that V.F.W. membership is limited to honorably discharged male veterans of any foreign war, insurrection or expedition recognized through the award of a campaign or service medal, which is not required by the American Legion.

Defense Stressed

As they prepared for the convention next week, leaders, and early arriving delegates who thronged the registration floor at the New York Hilton, discussed their agenda.

Foremost on their minds, several said, is the belief in a need for more government benefits for veterans, and stronger national defense. "Russia's building up her defenses and we're leaving ourselves wide open if we don't do the same thing," declared Mr. Walker. He is a safety compliance officer for Pfizer Chemical Company in New London, Conn., and former Connecticut state commander. He served in World War II and the Korean war.

The incoming national commander, R.D. Smith, of Toccoa, Ga., says he will concentrate on getting jobs for veterans of the Vietnam War, many of whom have recently completed G.I. educational programs.

Both commanders, and all of the delegates interviewed at random were strongly opposed to amnesty for those who resisted service in the Vietnam war.

The New York Times/Tyrone Dukes

Harry Isaacson, 83, in New York yesterday. "Those cowards don't deserve anything," commented the World War I veteran on amnesty for draft evaders.

"Those cowards don't deserve anything," asserted 83-year-old Harry Isaacson, who fought in Europe during World War I.

"They burned our flag and they laughed in our faces," Mr. Isaacson said, indignantly. He wore the khaki uniform and trench cap of World War I, and four ribboned medals across his chest. He grew up on the Lower East Side and still lives there.

"We wouldn't have had a Bicentennial if those guys had their way," said Ray Gallagher of Redfield, S. D., a past national commander, who served in World War II.

A proposal raised annually in recent years, and resoundingly defeated each time, will come up again next week—to drop the "male" requirement, and admit women veterans to membership. Just a few of the early arrivals would comment on the measure.

"Women went through the war just like we did and they should be qualified to belong same as me," said John A. Simonelli, 57-year-old former infantryman from Leesville, La., who was in World War II.

Forty-four-year-old John Lewis, also from Leesville, nodded assent. "We had a corporal, she was something else!" he recalled. "She was hard as nails."

4 DIE IN FLORI[DA] AT NURSING H[OME]

20 Others Ill—Dis[ease] Eludes Physician[s]

BOYNTON BEACH, Fla., Aug. 13 (UPI)—An undiagnosed disease in a nursing home killed four persons last night and yesterday, and made a [number] of others ill.

A medical team headed by Dr. James Howell of the Palm Beach County Health Department rushed to the Boynton Manor Nursing Home after the deaths were reported.

Dr. Howell said that the 90 other patients in the home had symptoms of the illness and had been put in isolation. Residents of the home range in age from [illegible] years.

"It appears to be some sort of virus, or at least viral in origin," Dr. Howell said. "It probably spread from person to person."

Dr. Howell's medical team began taking throat and blood samples and other tests to try to identify the illness. The blood samples were being sent to the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta.

The nursing home's administrator, Earl Kimble, said four patients developed fevers Wednesday morning that night a total of [illegible] were suffering from high temperatures.

"We notified physicians, the patients on antibiotics began monitoring their condition," Mr. Kimble said.

The first three patients died were among those to be stricken by the illness, he added. He identified the victims as Marion Wallace, 75, [illegible] Ross, 69, and Clarence [illegible]son, 73, all from the Boynton Delray Beach area. The [illegible] was not named.

Mr. Kimble said that he suspended admissions and [illegible]ing at the home and had followed epidemic procedures.

Dr. Howell said that the outward symptoms of the disease were high temperatures which in several cases reached 105 degrees. There was no nausea, diarrhea, [illegible] or acute coughing," he said. "It appears viral in origin."

This was the second [illegible] year that a mysterious [illegible] has swept through the [illegible] home. Last March, 19[illegible] were stricken with a flu-like illness, but all recovered.

Doctors Find Hint of Spread of Legion Dise of 102 degrees and pneumonia, the same signs of an illness that swept through last month's state American Legion convention here, United Press International reported.

"We have to tentatively consider them as examples of the illness," Dr. Polk said. "We have put them on the list of cases, but we still don't have all the information we'd like to have."

Dr. Polk added that neither man was critically ill.

The two, a 54-year-old priest and a 38-year-old musician had attended the Congress and stayed at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel, headquarters for the American Legion convention.

"We think it may be a coincidence, since pneumonia breaks out all year round in all cities," Dr. Polk said. "But that common factor, of the fever and illness, gives us a reason to think it could be related to the legion disease."

In addition to the two cases described by Dr. Polk, medical detectives are investigating the possibility that the disease struck some people who attended a candlemakers' convention in Philadelphia that ended July 21.

The end of that convention coincided with the beginning of the legion's convention, which was held July 21 to July 24.

The number of people associated with that convention who were affected by or died of the mysterious disease has fluctuated as the medical investigation progressed.

At the last news conference that was held by Pennsylvania health officials three days ago, the case total was 155, including 27 deaths.

However, at the meeting in Atlanta today, epidemiologists presented a revised case count of 145, including 24 deaths. The new case count was based on investaigations in Philadelphia yesterday by a team headed by Dr. David Fraser.

According to Dr. Denis J. Lucey 3d, Commissioner of Health Planning and Resources for the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, who attended the meeting, the incubation period of the mysterious illness ranges from three to eight days. But the average period is six days, he said.

Dr. Lucey had participated in the day-long meeting which was held at the Center for Disease Control, a Federal facility, in Atlanta. The meeting had been convened to enable various experts to review data relating to the disease.

Another, and equally significant, purpose of that meeting was to devise a system by which medical investigators could undertake a maximum number of tests for chemicals and poisons on the limited amount of human tissues gathered from post-mortem examinations of the victims.

Mars Life Theory Gets Setback As Soil Test Shows No Carbon

that have detected unexpectedly large amounts of oxygen in the soil and radioactivity readings that resemble those from microbe-containing soil from Antarctica.

As soon as he learned the results obtained by the organic instrument, Dr. Harold Klein, head of the Viking biology team, speculated that Martian organisms might be unusually efficient in scavaging waste material from dead microbes and, hence, might leave little trace of organic compounds in the soil.

In fact, Dr. Klein said, the total weight of the 10 million microbes living in a gram of rich garden soil on earth would fall below the detection limit of the instrument, even if the microbes were made of just one organic compound instead of hundreds, as in the case in nature.

Dr. Gerald Soffen, Viking project scientist, immediately countered that most of the organic matter found in soil on earth was in dead microbes and microbial wastes, not in living microbes.

Planetary Differences

Dr. Klein rejoined that on Mars, whose atmosphere is largely carbon dioxide, the situation might be different. On earth, all but a tiny fraction of the carbon vital for life is tied up in rocks. He said he could envision a Mars where little carbon stayed in the soil, and efficient microbes swept that up.

Dr. Soffen said, "We've found no organic above the level of one part per million. That's not a lot of organics." He said that all scientists agreed there could still be life on Mars.

In a telephone interview, Dr. Biemann said that microbes living for a long time in a soil sample on the Earth, "metabolizing and growing and dying," would accumulate hundreds or even thousands of times the weight of living microbes in by-products.

He agreed with Dr. Klein that if the Martian microbes were "very efficient in metabolizing their ancestors," the organic compounds might be consumed below the level of detection.

An Insurance Sample

The sample anchored by the instrument was collected from a sandy site called Sandy Flat on July 28, although the amount was insufficient to register on an indicator in the instrument's inlet. As insurance, a second sample was collected from the same site in an operation that caused the lander's soil-scooping boom to stall. This problem was solved a few days later.

Meanwhile, scientists decided to heat the presumed sample anyway, to a temperature of 392 degrees Fahrenheit. This was done last week, but produced no readings.

Thursday, the sample was heated to 932 degrees and produced a large amount of water liberated from rock crystals in the soil, some carbon dioxide and no trace of complex organic compounds.

Dr. Biemann said the second sample taken as insurance would be discarded in favor of one to be collected late next week, at a pebbly site among rocks, called Rocky Flat, that has a different color from Sandy Flat.

Analysis of the first sample, including elaborate computer processing at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, may turn up simple organic compounds or the more elaborate carbon-containing compounds at a lower limit of detection, he said. Such analysis will take days or even weeks, he added.

The musical, scheduled for four weeks at the Music Hall Center for the Performing Arts, was written and directed by Tommy Butler, a Detroit-born performer who plays the role of Dr. King.

Mrs. Parks, aged 63, is a receptionist in the Detroit office of Representative John Conyers and takes care of her ailing mother and father. The opening night proceeds of "Selma" went to the Rosa L. Anatoly Karpov "cannot understand where reports came from" that he and Bobby Fischer agreed on a date for an exhibition chess match when they met in Tokyo two weeks ago. In an interview with Sovetsky Sport, the official Soviet sport daily, the world champion said yesterday that their conversation "had a general character," but he did not deny outright that the two had agreed to play. Mr. Karpov won his title from Mr. Fischer by default in 1975.

In Amsterdam Viktor Korchnoi, still waiting for a decision on this July 27 request for political asylum, has received a temporary paid appointment as trainer of the Dutch team for the chess Olympiad in Israel in October. The Soviet grandmaster emerged from seclusion Wednesday to announce his intention to compete in next year's world candidates' matches to pick Mr. Karpov's challenger for the 1978 championship. Mr. Korchnoi is entitled to enter as runner-up in the 1974 candidates' matches.

He has challenged President Amin to a duel to be fought with pistols while the two were hanging from parachutes.

U.S. HALTS LICENSES FOR NUCLEAR PLANTS

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 (AP)—The Nuclear Regulatory Commission announced today that it would temporarily stop issuing full-power plant operating licenses while its staff assessed the environmental impact of fuel reprocessing and waste management associated with plants.

The staff analysis will be completed by Sept. 30.

The Commission will also suspend issuance of construction permits and limited work authorizations during this period, but other types of licensing will continue.

Bernard Rusche, director of the Office of Nuclear Reactor Regulation, said that construction would be delayed at five plants that might otherwise have been issued building permits by the end of the year.

The staff analysis is being conducted in response to United States Court of Appeals decisions in two cases July 21. The court found to be inadequate the rule under which the Commission considers the impact of reprocessing and waste disposal before it issues licenses. The court said that the rule must be more fully documented and explained.

The cases involved an operating license for the Vermont Yankee Power Corp. plant at Vernon, Vt., and a construction license for Consumer Power Company's Midland, Mich., station.

The five plants whose construction permits will be delayed are at St. Francisville, La.; Satsop, Wash.; Richland, Wash.; Fort Pierce, Fla., and Burlington, Kan.

McCarthy Buys Time To Push His Candidacy

WASHINGTON, Aug. 13 UPI)—The independent Presidential candidate Eugene J. McCarthy has bought five minutes of time on the CBS television network, his spokesman said today.

The appearance by Mr. Mc Carthy will be shown following the popular "Kojak" television show the night of Aug. 22 and will cost the candidate's shoestring budget "a fast $15,000," said the press secretary, James Yeager.

The program is designed "to bring his candidacy to national attention," Mr. Yeager said. He said the speech would be taped in Washington on Aug. 20, after Mr. McCarthy returned from a four-day campaign trip to California, where he is seeking enough petition signatures to get on the ballot.

SATELLITE PLAN IS GIVEN TO F.C.C.

Public Broadcasting Would Switch From Land Lines

By LES BROWN

The Corporation for Public Broadcasting yesterday submitted to the Federal Communications Commission the details of its plan to distribute public television programs by the Western Union satellite instead of by the land lines of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company.

The proposed system, which requires approval by the commission, calls for the use of three of four satellite transponders, or channels.

This gives it the unusual feature of permitting several programs to be transmitted simultaneously to stations, increasing their program choices. The land lines carry one program at a time.

Filed simultaneously were applications by 13 public stations for permission to construct stations to receive satellite signals and one by the Public Broadcasting Service for a main origination terminal.

150 Applications Seen

The F.C.C. was advised that there would eventually be a total of 150 station applications and that the satellite plan would also distribute programs for National Public Radio.

Public broadcasting officials could not say for certain that the satellite plan would immediately reduce distribution costs—now $10 million a year—but pointed out that the saving was likely to be considerable when the loans to finance the $39.5 million project were paid off in 10 years.

This will be because the individual public stations will then own outright the earth stations, which will cost around $100,000 each to build. They will take the place of telephone terminals, for which the stations are charged thousands of dollars a month.

"It is the difference between renting an apartment and buying a condominium," said Henry Loomis, president of the corporation.

The corporation told the F.C.C. that the bulk of the financing would come from a syndicate of private lending institutions, headed by the Bank of America. The arrangement would provide for a $32.5 million line of credit. The remaining $7 million is to come from within the Public Broadcasting System and grants from the Kresge and Ford Foundations.

Network Regains Interest in Boxing

The live heavyweight boxing match on CBS this afternoon between George Foreman, the former champion, and Scott LeDoux signals a revival of interest in the sport by the network. Boxing has been all but ignored as a televised sport for more than a decade.

Barry Frank, vice president of CBS Sports, said that beginning this fall the network would be covering boxing events extensively, both in the United States and abroad. He said he had made an exclusive arrangement with Rudolfo Sabattini, a European promoter, for a minimum of four championship fights a year from the Continent.

They would range in class from light-heavyweight down and would be presented, like the Foreman-LeDoux fight, in the "CBS Sports Spectacular" slot. "Sports Spectacular" is an anthology series covering a wide range of sports competitions.

CBS, meanwhile, has scheduled the match between Jimmy Young and Harold Smith, two heavyweight contenders, on Oct. 30.

"I think boxing is back with us," Mr. Frank said. "The problem in the past was having to do one match a week. A weekly series is the wrong vehicle for the sport. An anthology series, on the other hand, is capable of presenting a good fight whenever it comes along."

Mr. Frank said that CBS Sports would not attempt to create the matches especially for television. "Fights should be arranged by promoters and not by the networks," he said.

Judy Garland Special Planned by WNET

A one-hour special with Judy Garland, drawn from her 1964 variety series on CBS, and such classic films as "Pygmalion," "The Blue Angel" and "Caesar and Cleopatra" have been scheduled by WNET/13 for its summer fund-raising drive to be held Aug. 21-29.

The nine nights will be devoted almost entirely to special programming, ranging from a show of British slapstick with Ronnie Barker and Ronnie Corbett, entitled "The Picnic," to a pair of one-hour documentaries on political terrorism.

The schedule includes "The End of the Game," the half-hour documentary by Robin Lehman that won the 1975 Academy Award, and repeat showings of "Steambath," "The Good Old Days of Radio" and the five-part British Broadcasting Corporation dramatization of Emile Zola's "Nana."

Jury Still Puzzled by San Quentin Case

Special to The New York Times

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13 — The jurors who completed 24 days of deliberations in the San Quentin Six murder-conspiracy trial yesterday said in interviews today that there were "a number of unanswered questions" and "puzzles" in the case.

Yesterday, the jury of seven women and five men acquitted Fleeta Drumgo, Luis Talamantez and Willie Tate of all charges against them. But Johnny L. Spain was convicted of conspiracy to escape from San Quentin Prison by force and of two first-degree murders. Hugo Pinell and David Johnson were convicted of assault.

Ralph S. Long, a 59-year-old retired librarian from Mill Valley, said that the jury had "accepted" the prosecution's argument that George Jackson, the black revolutionary author and prison leader, had concealed a pistol in a wig and set off an escape attempt in the prison's maximum-security adjustment center when he returned from a visit with Stephen M. Bingham on Aug. 21, 1971.

Mr. Bingham, a lawyer, has been a fugitive ever since the escape attempt in which Mr. Jackson, three guards and two inmate trusties were killed.

However, Patricia Pagan, juror who is Bank of America teller and the mother of two, said she felt there were "two conspiracies"—one by Mr. Jackson to escape and "a counter-conspiracy" by the law enforcement authorities to kill Mr. Jackson. "George Jackson had a gun and he got the gun that day," she said, adding that she felt that Mr. Jackson was planning to try to escape two days later on his way to court for a scheduled trial.

Louis Tackwood, former special agent of the Los Angeles Police Department, had testified at the trial that the department's criminal conspiracy section had planned to "assassinate" Mr. Jackson.

Sandor Irish, a juror who is teller at Wells Fargo Bank and who lives in the city of San Rafael where the trial was held, said, "I still don't think I know what were the circumstances of George Jackson's death."

Mr. Spain was convicted of killing two guards who died of gunshot wounds. The jurors also found him guilty of conspiracy. All of the charges against the six defendants had grown out of the escape attempt.

The jurors differed somewhat as to whether they felt Mr. Spain had been part of a pre-existing conspiracy or whether he had joined a conspiracy to escape with Mr. Jackson after the latter returned from his visit. One juror, Wilma Thompson, said, "You have to remember what Spain had in his cell." She was referring to a map that from the prison and .38-caliber from the prison and .38-calliber shells found in a bar of soap.

According to the jury foreman, Cara Shipley, who was an unemployed secretary when jury selection began on March 25, 1975, the jurors had their "most heated arguments" about the conspiracy charge, the assault charge on which Mr. Johnson was ultimately convicted and the assault charge of which Mr. Drumgo was acquitted.

Mrs. Fagan said of the 24 days of deliberations: "There is a problem. Each person had gut feelings. Many jurors felt there was no conspiracy at all. And some felt there was a conspiracy by the C.D.C. [California Department of Corrections] to murder Mr. Jackson."

The jurors said they carefully went over the testimony in the 16-month trial that resulted in a transcript of 22,000 pages and more than 500 exhibits.

Rolled Up Sleeves

"We just rolled up our sleeves and got right down to the evidence," said another juror, Cleveland Knighten. "The people on the jury weren't any magna cum laudes or Rhodes Scholars, but they were very intelligent people with a lot of common sense and they weren't swayed by flamboyance." Mr. Knighten is a 37-year-old Internal Revenue Service agent who was the only black person on the jury.

The jurors were paid only $5 a day for their work and Mrs. Fagan stressed "no trial should ever be allowed to go this long. No one—the defendants, the lawyers, the judge, us—should be subjected to the hell."

The jurors said they felt they had succeeded in not allowing their decisions to be influenced by the fact that all the defendants except, Mr. Tate, who was the only defendant not currently in prison, were shackled around the waist and ankles during the entire trial. Lawyers for the defendants who were convicted said this would be a possible basis for appeal.

U.S. INVESTIGATES BLAST FATAL TO 12

Special to The New York Times

CHALMETTE, La., Aug. 13— Three investigators from the Federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration began probing the debris today to determine the cause of an explosion at a Tenneco Oil Company refinery here last night in which 12 workmen were killed and 10 others were seriously injured.

Policemen and rescue workers labored through the night and today to recover the bodies from the mangled wreckage of the 207-foot tower, a fractionizer, which separated crude oil into lighter-weight petroleum products.

The explosion was the second at the three-tower cluster at the plant within the last week, according to a spokesman for the Boilermakers International Brotherhood, the union that represents workers at the site. The sheriff's office in St. Bernard Parish (county), which includes Chalmette, also said that workers had reported an earlier blast.

However, a Tenneco spokesman denied that there had been an explosion at the plant last week.

Both Tenneco and the union have begun investigations into last night's blast.

When the explosion occurred, workmen had shut down the tower—16 feet in diameter and the height of a 30-story building—and were doing maintenance work. Ten of the men who died were employees of the Delta Field Erection Company, which specializes in refinery maintenance work.

Officials identified the dead as follows:

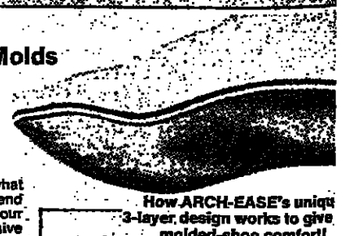
WHY PAY UP TO $100 OR MO FOR MOLDED SHOES?

These Miracle 2-Oz. Shoe Inserts Do The Same Thing—For Just $3.99!

Amazing Arch-Ease 3-Layer Foot Shock-Absorber Custom-Molds Itself To Your Arch And Foot! Makes Foot Pain And Leg Fatigue Start To Disappear Within One Hour!



If you've ever had tired, aching feet, you know what torture it can be. Your feet hurt like mad by the end of the day. And shooting pains go up and down your leg at every step. You've been eyeing those expensive molded-shoes—but don't like their weird styling . . . or their high price! And you don't want to go to a specialist, to be fitted with costly custom arch supports. Is there an answer that makes sense for you?

Now there is! We call it ARCH-EASE. It's a revolutionary new three-layer shoe insert that weighs just 2 ounces . . . and you can put your feet on the comfort standard in one hour or less—for just $3.99. (for the pair)! AND FORGET ABOUT THE $100.00 OR MORE THAT MOLDED SHOES MAY COST!

How ARCH-EASE Works

ARCH-EASE's unique 3 layer design makes the difference. The bottom layer, next to your shoe, is a spongy foam-rubber material that acts like a shock-absorber. It cushions every step, lets you walk on cobblestones or stand all day on concrete floors as if you were sinking into a plush carpet. But the middle layer is the most important secret of ARCH-EASE's success. It's a special synthetic material that molds itself to the exact shape of your foot—arches, bunions, corns, hammertoes, and all—within an hour of the time you begin to wear it! It's like having custom-molded shoes fitted to your feet. And, because you can easily transfer ARCH-EASE into any pair of shoes, it makes all your shoes feel as if they had been custom-molded!

ARCH-EASE not only supports and raises your arch; it takes the pressure off bunions, corns, hammertoes, and other foot problems . . . to relieve the agony they can cause! The bones and muscles in your foot and lower leg can work the way nature intended them to, without artificial stresses and strains! So you enjoy the foot comfort you've been praying for . . . without shelling out good money for expensive molded shoes!

ARCH-EASE's top layer is another comfortable surprise. It's designed to reduce the friction between your stockings and your shoe. So it helps to do away with that burning heat that turns your feet into "hot dogs"!

ARCH-EASE custom-molded foot shock-absorbers only $3.99 a pair.
